Small Stations

The CRB Needs To Protect Tiny Webcasters, Not Just Commercial Operations

BY JOHNIE FLOATER

Which radio platform provides airplay for the most acts? Jack FM? Sirius XM? Pandora? The answer may surprise you. It's the tens of thousands of small webcasters that make up the "long tail" of Internet radio. They may be small in size, but they are great in number.

In 2007, when the Library of Congress' Copyright Royalty Board (CRB) announced the 2006-2010 per-song royalty rates for online streaming of music—which were considered so high that many webcasters would have had to shut down—many companies and listeners complained. Congress eventually intervened, and a number of medium and large webcasting groups negotiated lower royalty rates with SoundExchange, the organization designated by the Librarian of Congress to collect royalties from webcasters. Pandora has even predicted profitability in 2010. But all is not well.

Live365, an aggregator of 6,000 user-created, small Internet radio stations, has not signed on to any of the SoundExchange alternative rate deals, which focused only on the needs of the large multimillion-hour-per-year webcasters. These deals fail to address the needs of tens, if not hundreds, of thousands of small webcasters.

Accurate tracking of every performance by these webcasters is the only way artists and copyright owners can be paid. This is complicated and costly, since webcasters must not only record which tracks were played, but also the exact number of people that heard each song—something terrestrial and satellite radio have never accomplished. Small webcasters also can't always generate enough revenue to pay royalties. Many small stations don't have money for an ad sales team, and even those that do don't have the scale to meet advertisers' minimum audience requirement. Tens of thousands of these small webcasters have found it easier to ignore the rules and not pay any royalties at all.

There is a solution: Thousands of other small webcasters have signed up with services like LoudCity and Live365 to leverage the benefits of aggregation. Although each station may webcast for just a few thousand hours per month, the combined hours provide enough of an audience to attract advertisers. Rather than have every station try to track and pay its own royalties, each benefits from a shared system that can track all their performances and pay the various royalty organizations. They can also purchase bandwidth in bulk to keep their costs down.

Even now, however, SoundExchange's percentage-of-revenue rates for small commercial webcasters (SCW) require an upfront $2,000-$5,000 annual minimum license fee for each webcaster. This in effect penalizes small webcasters, as the minimum fee is many times more than the normal per-performance rates they would pay. And aggregating thousands of webcasters into a single service results in total listening hours and revenue that exceed the SCW eligibility rules. This, in turn, deprives the participating small webcasters from he opportunity to take advantage of the percentage-of-revenue rates that Congress specifically intended for them.

Our proposal is to let aggregators pay a combined minimum for all their participating small webcasters and take on the reporting, compliance, administration and payment obligations similar to those that would apply to any large multiple-station webcaster—but allow the individual owners to pay royalties at the percentage-of-revenue rates provided under the Small Webcasters agreement. That would keep webcasting affordable for these small companies and allow many more performers and copyright owners to receive airplay—and appropriate royalties paid.

The aggregation of these thousands of stations into a single licensee would also benefit SoundExchange by reducing its overhead. In addition, many more artists and copyright holders will be given the chance to develop a fan base and make money from the sales of downloads, tickets and merchandise. Each month, thousands of individual small webcasters use the Live365 platform to stream music featuring more than 250,000 artists.

The next CRB rate-setting proceeding for the period 2011-2015 is about to begin in earnest, and Live365 and its webcasters are preparing to address these concerns in front of the Copyright Royalty Judges. But we first want to make sure that we are presenting our case to the proper rate-setting body. Recently, the validity of the appointment of the CRB judges has been challenged on constitutional grounds, and one appellate judge opined that this "raises a serious constitutional issue." Therefore, in early September, we filed a motion for preliminary injunction on behalf of all participating parties asking the court to rule on the constitutionality of the judges' appointments before the latest CRB proceeding continues. Millions of dollars will be spent for naught in these hearings if it is later determined that the judges were appointed erroneously.

Whichever agency or court we bring our case before, we sincerely hope that SoundExchange, the CRB, Congress and others that participate in the royalty-setting process see the benefits to all parties in our proposal. We believe that it will help the hundreds of thousands of artists deserving airplay, the tens of thousands of small webcasters spinning their favorite songs and the millions of listeners discovering the real depth and breadth of music.

Johnie Floater is GM of media for Live365, where he helps oversee thousands of Live365 webcasters. He has an MBA from UCLA's Anderson School of Management and 30 years of experience in various marketing, sales and management jobs in the online and radio businesses.

FOR THE RECORD

A story in the Sept. 26 issue should have reported that Mary Mary's 2009 hit "God in Me" was the duo's first Billboard Hot 100 hit in nine years, not that the pair had taken a nine-year hiatus.

>>>RESEARCH PREDICTS APP 'GOLD RUSH'
Research from the Yankee Group estimates that nearly 7 billion U.S. smartphone app downloads will produce $4.2 billion in revenue by 2013. The number of smartphone users is set to quadruple to 160 million during the same period, resulting in an app market "gold rush," Yankee Group says. In two new reports, the group recommends that consumer developers focus on RIM's BlackBerry and business app developers target Apple's iPhone and Google's Android platform.

>>>NEW JACKSON SONG, ALBUM COMING
A new Michael Jackson song titled "This Is It" will be released as a single Oct. 12. The song is part of a two-disc album of music inspired by the upcoming "This Is It" film, which chronicles Jackson's final days rehearsing for his comeback concerts before his death. The "This Is It" double-album will be released worldwide Oct. 26 and in North America Oct. 27.

>>> LIVE NATION, BET PARTNER
Live Nation has partnered with BET Networks to produce a series of U.S. tours that are set to visit Live Nation-owned House of Blues venues and other clubs and theaters across the country. The new partnership will launch this fall with the 106 & Park tour, which will feature co-headliners Trey Songz and Mario. The tour begins Sept. 29 at the House of Blues in Los Angeles and will visit major U.S. cities through November.

A 'Current' Affair

'Embedded' Provides A New Music Documentary Outlet On TV

Mos Def is in a Tokyo hotel room, wearing a bathrobe and smoking a cigarette. He's holding forth on the differences between Japanese and American culture, revealing how impressed he is by the intensity of the local hip-hop fans who have been filling clubs for a week to see him perform.

It's an intriguing look at the thought process behind his charismatic onstage persona—and it's all part of the debut episode of "Embedded," Current TV's new hourlong music documentary program that airs weekly starting Oct. 14.

Besides Mos Def, the initial run of six episodes will feature Common, Ben Harper, Thievery Corporation, Silversun Pickups and the Decemberists.

In an era when networks are slashing production budgets in favor of cheaper, quick-hit reality programming and when informative TV music segments are rarely more than two minutes long, Current TV's "Embedded" is a throwback to a time of pre-YouTube attention spans.

After the first run of six episodes is completed, the channel will debut a few "best of" compilations from all of the shows, and then plans to air another six-episode season in the coming months, according to Davis Powers, VP of music programming at Current TV.

"No one is committing to this type of music programming in the television space," Powers says. "We wanted to commit to doing real music journalism and documentaries—and that comes with working with the artists on the ground floor."

For the Mos Def episode of "Embedded," that meant spending seven days with him as he performed at venues in Tokyo and Osaka. Mos Def appears in clubs affiliated with Billboard through a licensing deal with Hanshin Contents Link.

"When we're talking to these artists," Powers says, "the things that they don't think will be compelling are actually the things we hang on the most."

In an episode featuring the Decemberists, the focus is on portraying a band in its hometown "and what they like to be surrounded by in the midst of them preparing for a very ambitious tour," she says. In another episode, Silversun Pickups are seen in the promotional whirl of the week before their album "Swoon" was released in April 2009.

The "Embedded" team that travels with the artists is intentionally small, usually consisting of Current TV senior producer of music programming Alex Simmons and executive producer Mark Rinehart. That intimacy gives them the flexibility to build "Embedded" documentaries around an artist's lifestyle, which has been the show's primary draw for labels, artists and managers.

"Instead of spending 10 minutes on the phone with someone, you can really see what their lives are like," Simmons says. "It makes them much more interesting subjects."

In addition to each episode's main artist documentary, "Embedded" features shorter segments that focus on emerging artists. The show has also partnered with Web site La Blogotheque, which is providing short videoclips of live performances by acts like Passion Pit, Amanda Palmer and K'Naan to close each episode.

Founded in 2005 with funding from former Vice President Al Gore, Current TV is available on select cable and satellite providers, including Comcast, Time Warner, DirecTV and Dish Network. It recently captured international headlines when North Korean authorities detained Current TV journalists Laura Ling and Euna Lee for nearly five months before releasing them in August. Former MTV Networks president Mark Rosenthal was named CEO of the channel's corporate parent, Current Media, in July.

To enhance the appeal of "Embedded" among Current TV's target demographic of 18- to 34-year-old viewers, the network's Web site will feature additional performances and outtakes of artists who appear on the show. The show's Mos Def episode will be available online to stream in its entirety. In addition, Current TV reached a deal with Virgin America for "Embedded" to air as part of the airline's in-flight programming on cross-country flights.

"What we're all really working for is definitive pieces that will be evergreen," Powers says. "You can come back and watch Mos in Japan three years from now and it will still be a true document of that time." ...

>>>MODERATTO ROCKS FOR MICROSOFT
Mexican rock band Moderatto will partner with Microsoft in October to promote the latest version of Windows in Mexico. The band wrote a new song, "Zodiaco," incorporating distorted versions of tones that are heard when computers running the operating system are booted up. The song will be included on an upcoming hits EP by the band. The band's manager, Federico Ponce de Leon, says Microsoft will sponsor a Moderatto concert at Mexico City's giant public square, the Zocalo, early next year.

>>>AMIE STREET TO OFFER SONY CATALOG
Online music retailer Amie Street will begin selling music from Sony Music. The deal covers both current and catalog tracks. Unlike other tracks on Amie Street, the Sony songs will not be priced using the site's dynamic pricing model, where prices vary based on sales. Instead, a song will retail for either $.69, $.99, or $1.29.

Ingrooves will digitally distribute Cherry Picked Records, the record division of Cherry Lane Music Group. In addition to its developing artists, Cherry Picked Records controls the master recordings for some of its well-known larger brands, such as Marvel Entertainment, NFL Films, NASCAR, Pokémon and Hello Kitty. Prior releases from Cherry Picked include the multiplatinum release "Pokémon: 2.B.A Master," as well as the collectible boxed set "Autumn Thunder: 40 Years of NFL Films Music."

Despite Challenges, Trans World Looks Sound For Now

Minding the store: Trans World Entertainment chairman/CEO BOB HIGGINS

Amid the continued plunge in U.S. physical music sales, Trans World Entertainment hasn't had a profitable quarter since the three months that ended Feb. 1, 2007. But thanks to the company's efforts to reduce operating expenses and close unprofitable stores, the Albany, N.Y., retail chain could finally return to the black in its fourth fiscal quarter that ends Feb. 1, 2010.

During the company's annual employee conference in mid-September, Trans World chairman/CEO Bob Higgins struck a positive tone, saying he expects business to improve, citing what he sees as a promising slate of new releases. Higgins also touted the success of the company's recent pricing experiment in 54 of its stores, where it is selling every CD for $9.99. Industry sources say the pricing experiment, which has secured the participation of Universal Music Group, Sony Music Entertainment and EMI Music, has helped more than double unit sales in those locations.

Retail Track
ED CHRISTMAN

Of course, the sales gains in those stores are too small to have much impact on the overall financial results of the chain, which operates nearly 700 U.S. locations. Still, in his address to Trans World employees, Higgins stressed the importance of pushing ahead with the repricing plan.

"In the current environment, it is extremely important we give value to the customer and we are depending on everyone to support this initiative," he said. "The results speak for themselves —when you offer the customer the right product at the right price, they will buy."

According to Billboard estimates, Trans World was the seventh-largest music retailer in the United States in 2008, with about 3.8% share of the market, down from 4.2% in 2007 (Billboard, May 9).

Music accounted for 37% of Trans World's $357.2 million in net sales during the six months that ended Aug. 1 (the first half of its fiscal year), compared with 38% of the company's net sales of $447.8 million during the same period last year. Home video accounted for 42% of the company's net sales in the quarter, up from 40% a year earlier.

On a same-store basis, music sales were down 15% at Trans World during the six-month period, compared with a 21% decline in the year-earlier period. Meanwhile, home video sales were down 7% on a same-store basis, compared with an increase of 3% a year earlier.

While the competition remains strong for music and video, "as the last man standing any space reduction by our competition enables us to gain market share and grow our sales," Higgins said, pointing out that Wal-Mart recently eliminated DVD outpost fixtures in many of its stores, while Best Buy and Target have shifted their respective store layouts, with less prominent placement for music and home video.

Although second-quarter net sales fell 23% to $165.7 million from $215.2 million during the same period last year, the company's losses before interest, taxes, depreciation and amortization remained steady in the quarter, totaling $13.3 million, little changed from $13.2 million a year earlier. Gross margin in the second quarter was 35.5%, improving slightly from 35.3% a year earlier. Selling, general and administrative expenses fell 20% to $75.8 million in the quarter, from $94.5 million a year earlier, though it went up as a percentage of revenue to 45.7%, from 43.9% a year earlier.

While the major labels consider Trans World to be on sound financial footing well into 2010, some independent labels and distributors tell Billboard privately that they remain concerned about the chain's string of 10 quarterly losses.

But Billboard's analysis of the chain's balance sheet shows that Trans World won't be a credit risk during the holiday selling season. At the end of its fiscal second quarter, Trans World had $320.4 million in inventory and $7.1 million in cash. On the other side of the ledger, accounts payable totaled $94.7 million in the second quarter and the company had drawn down $28.3 million from its revolving credit facility.

That left $204 million in inventory overhang, a useful barometer of a company's near-term financial health. The absence of overhang would raise serious questions about the company's ability to meet its debt obligations. Moreover, Trans World had another $104 million available under the lending formula for its $150 million revolving credit facility at the end of the second quarter. Cash raised by store closures and credit for product returns helped boost Trans World's overhang and minimize how much it had to draw from the credit facility.

In other words, the company has plenty of liquidity despite its string of quarterly losses. Even if Trans World has a disastrous fourth fiscal quarter—which doesn't appear likely—Billboard believes it should still be able to meet its debt obligations. ••••

We Have The Technology

Apps Have Rejuvenated Mobile Music—Now It's Time For Carriers To Respond

The mobile music landscape is very much a study in good news, bad news.

The bad news is that mobile music has failed to live up to the expectations that the early success of ringtones had inspired. Combined ringtone and ringback tone sales have fallen almost 23% so far this year, according to Nielsen RingScan. And Forrester Research analyst Sonal Gandhi estimates that only one-third of U.S. mobile subscribers with music-capable phones use their devices to listen to music.

"That's not very big in the grand scheme of things, considering how long we've had MP3-capable phones," she says. "Compare that to iPhones users. Almost 60% of them are listening to music on their phones, and it's only been around two years."

But it's not all gloom and doom. The mobile content business is undergoing a dramatic sea change, evidenced by the introduction of downloadable applications for such devices as the iPhone, BlackBerry and Android-powered phones. This new app-based distribution model allows developers and service providers to create mobile-specific services and sell them directly to users without interference from mobile operators, which historically have restricted the flow of new services available on their networks.

This, combined with more sophisticated handsets and smart phones, has already had a positive effect on mobile music consumption. According to Gandhi, mobile music usage—while still low overall—doubled during the past year. She credits music apps like Pandora and Slacker as driving the bulk of that increase.

And there are more music apps coming. RealNetworks just released an iPhone version of its Rhapsody subscription music service, marking the first time U.S. music fans can access on-demand streaming music from their mobile phones. Spotify just launched a similar app in Europe as well.

Both require monthly subscription plans, which will certainly affect adoption. But it's only a matter of time before a U.S. mobile carrier decides to bundle a monthly music subscription into the cost of an unlimited mobile data plan to retain existing customers and attract new ones.

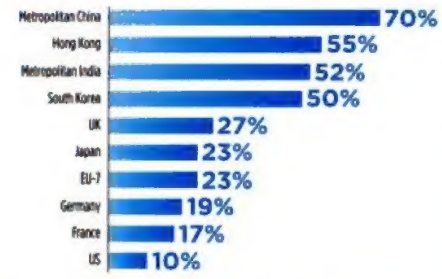
"Mobile companies have to be really serious about using music as a differentiator," Gandhi says. "They're the best people to do music subscription because they have a billing relationship. They can get people to pay a certain amount monthly without even thinking about it, [and] that can be used as a way to drive data adoption as well."

Carriers have avoided doing so because of network bandwidth capacity and cost concerns. But carrier sources say network improvements have addressed those concerns, adding that the remaining hurdle is getting labels to agree to a licensing rate low enough to offer a reasonable price to subscribers.

In the meantime, even Verizon Wireless—once considered the most difficult operator to work with—is now providing developers access to such sensitive network data as location data and messaging controls in hopes of discovering new, innovative services that will also appeal to customers.

The success of the iPhone App Store has served as a wakeup call to mobile carriers, which haven't focused much on developing new services around music. In their defense, the thin margins gained from mobile music services didn't result in the kind of revenue that inspires innovation on that front. So by partnering with music-focused companies that have the incentive to make their services accessible to mobile customers, carriers hope to discover new services and spur adoption.

"This is us saying we're going to be good at a few things . . . but there's a whole bunch of other stuff open to innovation," says Ed Ruth, director of strategic business development and partner management for Verizon Wireless. "Combine the ideas of the developer with the areas of expertise of the carrier, and you now have a brand-new offering with great consumer advocacy and interest meeting a need that's traditionally been a nascent space."



Of course, this could just be the beginning of yet another round of hype, something the mobile industry is no stranger to. How it responds to the early success of music apps could determine whether the industry will repeat its earlier disappointment with ringtones or finally succeed in developing a larger, more lucrative mobile music market.

"Ringtones and ringback tones have certainly been a really big business and caused artists and the music industry to really pay attention to mobile," says Rob Hyatt, director of premium content at AT&T. "The real challenge for us collectively is—what's next?"

Like the idea of Internet-connected TV but don't want to replace your TV set just yet? Sony has come out with a possible solution: a Blu-ray DVD player that also connects to the company's Bravia Internet Video platform.

The Bravia platform includes on-demand music from the Slacker digital music service, YouTube videos, streaming access to Netflix and other services. Included in the device is software designed to connect to Wi-Fi routers for wireless Internet connectivity and supports 7.1 channel Dolby TrueHD and Digital Plus surround sound, among other audio formats.

The BDP-N460, as it is officially called, is scheduled to go on sale in October for $250. —AB

BITS & BRIEFS

MEDIANET ADDS MUSIC STREAM LINKS

The digital music technology provider MediaNet introduced a new service that allows customers to add streaming music to their Web sites. The software automatically converts any mention of an artist, song or album into a hyperlink that will lead to an artist's Web page or open a media player to stream a sample of a corresponding track from MediaNet's catalog of 7 million songs. It also adds links to buy and download tracks. Customers include iLike, which used the technology as the back end of its new digital download service, and MOG, which is incorporating it into its soon-to-be-launched streaming music service.

NEUROTIC, CM2OLDIES LAUNCH MUSIC STORE

Neurotic Media and CM2Oldies have teamed to target the baby boomer crowd with iOldiesMusicStore.com, which sells song downloads, ringtones, CDs and DVDs from major and independent labels. Neurotic Media is providing the digital download capabilities, as well as the e-commerce features that allow the site to bundle digital products with physical goods. It's also handling all accounting and back-end functions.

NING ROLLS OUT NEW FEATURES

Ning has unveiled free applications from third-party developers that add new features of interest to recording artists who use Ning's technology to create their own social networks. Artists can use the apps to sell concert tickets, stream mobile videos, conduct live video chats and sell merchandise.

WHITNEY HOUSTON WOWS WORLDWIDE!

#1 USA #1 Canada #1 Germany #1 Italy #1 Switzerland

Over 550,000 U.S. Soundscan Sales in just 3 weeks!

The critics agree the album was worth the wait!

"Whitney Houston makes it clear which record-breaking diva is back on top. Although a new generation of R&B singers have since arrived on the charts, it's Houston who will close this decade with every note still touching gold"

Billboard

"Strong, confident and ready, "I Look To You" is loaded with tunes that are perfect for recapturing the magic that made her a transcendent star. Houston clearly hasn't forgotten how to sing, imbuing the material with emotional power without a lot of overly dramatic vocal runs." ★★★½

USA TODAY

"It is a modern soul record, a collection of spunky love songs that aim at something more immediate and tangible than nostalgia or catharsis, distinctively Whitney." ★★★½

Rolling Stone

"Whitney Houston re-emerges with full diva qualifications on I Look to You"

The New York Times

The comeback was worth the wait! The diva delivers an eclectic album that has the bleeding ballads ("I Didn't Know My Own Strength" is destined to become a classic) and club anthems she's known for but also flexes new musical muscles." ★★★★

In Touch Weekly

"It's sure great to hear that voice again."

It Takes A Village

Latin Biz Needs To Redouble Efforts To Develop New Talent

Latin music faces many of the same issues as other genres: a tough economy, the impact of online piracy, the closing of music retailers, the liquidation of distributor Handleman and a loss of space at mass merchant stores.

But the biggest worry in Latin music has been a glaring scarcity of blockbuster hits and superstars. At least this is a problem with a potential solution.

If there are few new hits and stars, it's often because labels aren't investing enough in developing them. But the problem goes deeper than that: Even when labels develop new talent, radio, the news media and retailers often fail to rise to the challenge.

Although there has been significant growth in U.S. Latin radio, the format isn't as hit-driven as mainstream radio, which severely limits the slots open for new songs, much less new artists. Case in point: powerful pop station KLVE (107.5 FM) Los Angeles, which the Nielsen BDS Hot Latin Songs panel recently dropped because its playlist was more than 80% recurrent tracks.

The radio charts in turn drive much of the dwindling media coverage available to Spanish-language acts. Try convincing a top-rated show like "Don Francisco Presenta," for example, to feature an up-and-coming act without a hit song.

"It's been a long time since we had a new Ricky Martin, a new Shakira," says Raymond Guadalupe, Latin sales manager for Select-O-Hits. "And really, it's radio that needs to step up and create those artists."

But even other sectors of the industry turn a blind eye to the hitmakers of tomorrow. Regional Mexican singer/songwriter Espinoza Paz managed to top radio and sales charts earlier this year and won the Billboard and BMI songwriter of the year awards. And yet, he didn't garner a single Latin Grammy Award nomination for his solo work. Neither did emerging act Da'Zoo, although it cracked Billboard's Top Latin Albums chart, something none of the other new Latin artist nominees accomplished.

Perversely, it seems as though the industry punishes success at a time when it should be embracing a more urgent approach to fostering new talent. According to Nielsen SoundScan, Latin album sales in the United States year to date totaled 12 million through the week that ended Sept. 13, plunging 35% from 18.5 million during the same period last year. That's a far faster rate of decline than the 14% drop in overall album sales in the United States during the same period.

New faces on the album chart: DA'ZOO

Fortunately, there are signs of hope. TV shows like Univision's "Despierta América" and La Mega's "Esta Noche Tonight Con Alexis Valdés" are steadfast supporters of new talent. And award shows like the Billboard Latin Music Awards and Premios Juventud have been increasingly open to emerging artists, while cable channels like MTV Tr3s and mun2 cater to a younger, bilingual fan base interested in new faces.

Beyond that, it behooves Latin labels—major and indie—to forge closer ties with mainstream media and outlets, from Amazon and iTunes to ABC's "Good Morning America" and Sirius XM satellite radio (which has only two Latin channels in its lineup).

And it behooves everyone involved in the Latin music industry to stop criticizing labels for not developing acts, and rather, step up to the plate when these labels push their new wares. There may very well be something to cheer about. ••••

THE BILLBOARD ¿Q&A?

Earlier this year, Televisa Networks named Victor Manuel Moreno Valadez executive producer of its regional Mexican music and lifestyle channel Bandamax. The 23-year Televisa veteran spoke with Billboard ahead of his scheduled appearance as a panelist at Billboard's Regional Mexican Music Summit Oct. 9.

How do you decide what videos to program on Bandamax?

People call and make requests. Often what happens is that there are enormous fan clubs that call. We use instruments that give us measurements of TV and radio [ratings]. We analyze charts, but [sometimes] something on the Billboard charts doesn't exist as a videoclip. Jenni Rivera has a song right now on the charts called "Ovarios." But there's no video for it, so we have to adjust to what videos do exist because that's what we can show.

Should more money be invested in regional Mexican videos?

It's true that they don't invest as much money in a video as pop groups, and normally a regional Mexican video lacks some production values. [But] people listen to that music because they've listened to it their whole lives. People that listen to it aren't expecting a big display of production. They prefer the musical part to the visual part. They're interested in seeing their artist, but if you do a well-made video, it's like a plus.

But you can also make interesting videos without a big budget?

That's the challenge, to make good videos with minimal resources. There are very '80s formulas in which [directors] make the members of the group act in the video, when they don't have the slightest notion of how to act. So they miss a lot of narrative or interpretive elements. But you can make a good video with minimal budget.

Does YouTube popularity convince you to play a video?

YouTube is a reference as far as what these groups are doing. Some of the groups that come for [televised] interviews do so because Rafa Valderrama, one of our hosts, says, "This group is playing in Chihuahua [Mexico], check them out." We check YouTube and if they have quality music, we invite them to participate.

RIVERA FAMILY TO GATHER FOR SUMMIT PANEL

The Rivera family—stars Jenni Rivera, Lupillo Rivera and Juan Rivera and their father, industry icon Pedro Rivera—will sit together for a unique industry panel during Billboard's Regional Mexican Music Summit in October.

The Riveras, considered the leading family of regional Mexican music in the United States, have never shared the podium before at an industry event. The family will discuss their history in the industry, from Pedro's launch of his indie label Cintas Acuario to the successful careers of Lupillo, Jenni and now, Juan.

Most recently, Jenni—one of the top-selling and most dynamic female figures in the genre—became the first regional Mexican artist to sell out two consecutive performances at Los Angeles' Nokia Theatre L.A. Live, drawing attendance of nearly 20,000 last month.

The Rivera panel will take place at 2:30 p.m. Oct. 8 as part of the Regional Mexican Music Summit at the Los Angeles Hyatt Regency Century Plaza Hotel. The family will be part of a roster of celebrity panelists, who will also include superstar Alejandro Fernández, featured in the star Q&A; corrido star Larry Hernandez (his album "16 Narco Corridos" is No. 7 on Billboard's Top Latin Albums chart); and singer/songwriter Espinoza Paz, who hit No. 1 on both the sales and radio charts earlier this year and has his "Yo No Canto, Pero Lo Intentamos" at No. 6 on Top Latin Albums.

UNIVERSAL TO RELEASE NEW 'ATRÉVETE A SOÑAR' ALBUMS

The Mexican tween-focused telenovela "Atrévete A Soñar," whose cast album was No. 2 in Mexico at press time and has hovered either at or near the top of the Amprofon sales charts since April, will spawn several new titles. Universal Mexico will release the second volume of songs from the Televisa show Sept. 29, followed by a Christmas album and a live set. Universal expects the show to air in the United States beginning in March, after which the label plans to release the new titles stateside. —Ayala Ben-Yehuda

>>>HMV'S XMAS EXPANSION

The entertainment retail chain HMV plans to open up to 15 temporary U.K. stores for the Christmas shopping season. Beginning in October, the company will temporarily lease retail space in towns lacking an entertainment retailer. HMV Group CEO Simon Fox says it will open stores in midsize towns that "may possibly not justify an entertainment presence all year-round but which certainly justify one for the 12 key [Christmas shopping] weeks." HMV hasn't yet announced the locations. The move follows the demise earlier this year of the Zavvi and Woolworths chains.

>>>GERMAN REVIVAL PREDICTED

Recorded-music revenue in Germany is expected to resume growing in 2013 as digital revenue compensates for the loss of physical sales, the labels group BVMI says, citing data from the market research firm Gfk. Digital revenue, including that from music subscriptions and online streaming, is expected to grow an average of 17% per year through 2013, while physical music sales are expected to fall 5% per year, according to Gfk. German recorded-music sales totaled €1.6 billion ($2.3 billion) in 2008, down more than 50% from a decade earlier.

>>>TORONTO BAND WINS POLARIS

The Toronto hardcore band Fucked Up won Canada's Polaris Music Prize with its second album, "Chemistry of Common Life" (Matador). The $20,000 Canadian ($18,650) prize honors the best Canadian album of the year, as determined by a jury of 10 Canadian music journalists, bloggers and broadcasters. Other nominees included Newfoundland's Hey Rosetta, Toronto's Metric and Canadian/Somalian rapper K'Naan. Ten acts performed during the three hour-plus awards show Sept. 21. A one-hour edited version of the program will air Sept. 26 on MuchMusic.

I Want My MTV

Aussie Indies Seek New Video Licensing Deal

BRISBANE, Australia—Australia's indie labels say they're on the verge of a breakthrough in their long-running dispute with MTV over licensing rights for music video broadcasts.

The conflict has rumbled on since October 2007, when leading indie Shock Entertainment pulled its videos from Australia's three MTV channels (MTV, VH1, TMF) in protest over the lack of royalty payments, which Shock says dried up without explanation in 2004.

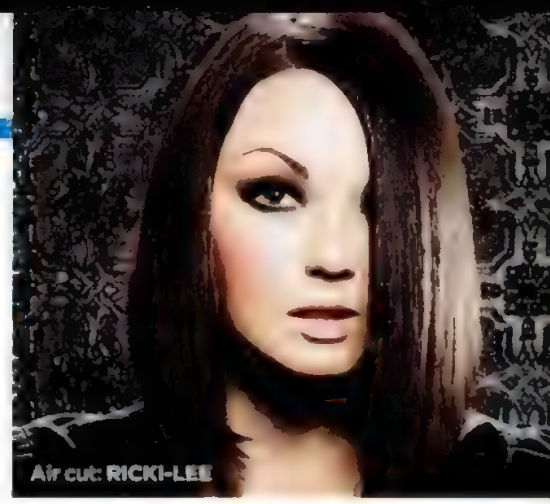
Indies organization the Assn. of Independent Record Labels (AIR) upped the ante in January when the Australian Competition and Consumer Commission granted permission for its 60-plus members to negotiate jointly without having to worry about breaking competition laws.

AIR has notified eight companies of its intent to negotiate licensing terms on behalf of all its members. Of these companies, MTV has been "the most resistant" to striking a deal, according to AIR chairman David Vodicka. Other targeted broadcasters and telecom companies are Telstra, Optus, BigPond, Austar, Foxtel, XYZ and Fuel TV.

"This is not about getting a better deal," Vodicka says. "It's about getting a deal. MTV point-blank does not have deals with anyone but the majors."

MTV Networks Australia managing director Dave Sibley doesn't dispute the charge.

"We simply can't administer deals with hundreds of indies on an individual basis," Sibley says. "But we've always been happy to do it with a collecting society."



After more than a year of negotiations—AIR rejected an earlier MTV offer in 2008—Billboard understands the two sides are expected to reach a settlement before Christmas. Until then, the likes of Shock and Beggars Group-owned Remote Control Records will continue to withhold videos.

Shock managing director Marcus Seal went public in July with his frustration over negotiations. Seal says the "vast majority" of its international label partners—which include Cooking Vinyl and V2—also stopped submitting videos in 2007. The Prodigy, Bloc Party and rising home-grown acts Architecture in Helsinki and Ricki-Lee are among those affected by the dispute.

Other indies involved in the collective bargaining allow broadcasters to air their videos but declined to comment.

AIR says Aussie indie labels generate more than $50 million Australian ($43 million) in annual music sales. Indie-label sources estimate hundreds of thousands of dollars have been lost since 2004 in the absence of an MTV licensing arrangement.

Australian indies take heart from a similar 2004 U.K. dispute that ended when Video Performance Ltd., sister company to neighboring rights collecting society Phonographic Performance Ltd., struck a licensing agreement with MTV just hours before independent videos were due to be pulled from the network.

Air cut: RICKI-LEE

Alison Wenham, chairman/CEO of the United Kingdom's Assn. of Independent Music, says Australia's indies have a similarly strong case.

"Until all independent companies' videos are properly recognized and remunerated, the concerns expressed by the Australian indie community will continue," Wenham says. "I am sure MTV will do the right thing."

Assuming a deal is struck, the next hurdle would be to work out how to collect the royalties. Australia's major-label collecting society, Phonographic Performance Co. of Australia, has kept out of the dispute, leading some to speculate AIR might do the job itself.

Vodicka doesn't rule that out, but says, "We're not trying to set up AIR as a collecting society. If utilizing PPCA is a viable option to do the actual distribution, then that is an option we'd consider."

For now, both parties hope to resolve the dispute without a copyright tribunal, leaving the indies to move on to other targets.

"We simply want the indies to be paid a fair and equitable payment for the use of their content," Shock's Seal says. "And we won't back down." ••••

Tinchy Stryder's Apparel Line Is A Hit In The U.K.

LONDON—Diminutive U.K. urban star Tinchy Stryder is proving to be a big hit—not just with his music, but also his Star in the Hood clothing line.

The artist and his managers—Archie Lamb and Jack Foster of London-based Takeover Entertainment—originally envisioned the line as a tool to promote Stryder's independently released 2007 debut album, "Star in the Hood" (Takeover Entertainment). Specializing in T-shirts featuring the brand name in bright colors, Star in the Hood has generated sales of more than £500,000 ($824,000) so far in 2009, according to Universal's Island Records, which shares in Stryder's merch rights through a comprehensive 360 deal.

In the past six months, Star in the Hood has expanded to include high-end diamante-embossed items and women's and children's clothing. Island projects sales will hit £1 million ($1.7 million) by the end of 2009, up from £400,000 ($654,000) last year, according to his management.

Clothes make the artist: STRYDER

"It's been nuts," says Stryder (real name Kwasi Danquah), who cites Jay-Z's Rocawear brand as a business model. "The initial idea wasn't even to sell it. The plan was just to wear it and let people become aware of the album."

Ironically, the album "Star in the Hood" has sold only 6,000 copies, according to the Official Charts Co. (OCC). Following a one-off single, "Stryderman," in July 2008, Stryder's team signed a multirights partnership with Island that covers revenue from recorded music, touring, merchandise and public appearances.

Island Records Group commercial director David Hawkes declines to reveal exact revenue splits but describes the merch deal as "effectively a profit split between label, artist and manager," weighted "slightly in favor of artist and manager."

Hawkes says sales from the online store (starinthehood.net) stand at approximately 500 units per week, with T-shirts retailing at £15-£45 ($25-$74) and hooded tops at £35 ($57). Universal-owned merch company Bravado is the exclusive supplier of all Star in the Hood clothing.

The brand has also made inroads in the mainstream U.K. apparel business through the national fashion outlet Foot Asylum and HMV, the United Kingdom's market-leading entertainment retailer, which had two exclusive T-shirt designs on sale in the runup to the Aug. 17 release of Stryder's second studio album, "Catch 22" (4th & Broadway/Island).

HMV declines to reveal sales figures but says the clothing line has "performed well." HMV merchandise manager Maxine Lister says that Stryder wearing the product is a key factor in its popularity, helping "to highlight and promote [Star in the Hood] to his fan base and the wider public."

"When you've got an artist that's tiny and always wears a top with 'Star in the Hood' on the front, in pure marketing speak, it's a really cool identity," says Island marketing director Sarah Boorman, who credits Star in the Hood with boosting traffic to the artist's Web site and, in turn, building his fan base.

Having scored two U.K. No. 1 singles in 2009, "Number 1" and "Never Leave You," Stryder's "Catch 22" entered the U.K. albums chart at No. 2. It has sold 63,000 copies, according to the OCC.

Following Star in the Hood's success, Island is preparing a bespoke clothing line for alternative act Florence & the Machine. Other U.K. artists who have apparel lines include Universal's Taio Cruz, with his self-owned Rokstarr label. Meanwhile, Stryder plans to add accessories and footwear and expand into more retail outlets next year.

"It's very important to expand and see what other things are available for you to do," Stryder says. "Star in the Hood is a lifestyle that people can relate to. Even if they're not from the hood, everyone comes from somewhere and everyone's a star in their own way." ••••

Diving Into Digital

HMV Turns To 7digital For Download Boost

LONDON—HMV, the undisputed ruler of U.K. physical music retail, is hoping a deal with 7digital can extend its dominance to downloads.

HMV paid £7.7 million ($12.7 million) for a 50% stake in 7digital (Billboard.biz, Sept. 3). Having launched in 2004, the latter company runs download stores in 12 territories and also powers services for other retailers, labels and bands.

7digital will power all of HMV Group's digital businesses, which will retain their current branding but use 7digital technology and staff.

"Our customers are asking for a great digital service," HMV Group CEO Simon Fox says of the reasoning behind the deal. "We don't think we're providing it yet."

HMV has undergone numerous revamps of its download offering since launching as a subscription service in 2002, but it has failed to challenge iTunes' market dominance. Its initial a la carte offering, launched in 2005, was hampered by a lack of compatibility with iPods, although it finally switched to the MP3 format two years ago.

Last year, HMV had a market-leading 21.2% share by volume of combined physical and digital album sales in the United Kingdom but just 4% of the digital-dominated singles market, according to the BPI. iTunes took 71.8%. 7digital's market share figure isn't available.

7digital's first job for HMV will be to roll out a download operation in Canada during the fourth quarter.

"We need to move quickly over there," Fox says. "The physical [mail order] side of online has not taken off because of the huge distances and high cost of delivery, so it is absolutely ripe for digital."

In first-quarter 2010, 7digital will relaunch HMV's flagship U.K. digital download service, which Fox believes will benefit from 7digital's "flexibility, speed to market [and] the fact they are in tune with technology in a way we are not."

HMV projects 7digital will post a loss before interest, taxes, depreciation and amortization of about £1 million ($1.6 million) in 2009. HMV and 7digital declined to release 7digital's comparable 2008 financial results.

"We're scaling up to meet the demands of the HMV business," 7digital CEO Ben Drury says, adding that the 50-50 deal means it's in HMV's interest for 7digital "to be successful as a stand-alone entity."

Drury will also be encouraged to develop its business-to-business dealings, believed to provide the lion's share of 7digital's income. It licenses elements of its platform to clients like Spotify and Last.fm, enabling users to link to 7digital to purchase downloads.

"We've seen huge growth in that area," Drury says. "Our business has always worked because we've had a good blend of B2B and consumer. The margins are higher on the B2B side, because they are using our technology and skills."

All of 7digital's stores—including the U.S. store, currently in beta—will retain their existing branding.

Forrester Research VP/research director Mark Mulligan says the deal is a good one for the brick-and-mortar retailer, noting that while 7digital's download market share is "relatively small," it always "punches above its weight."

"They always push hard at striking the right partnerships, which help build exposure as well as straightforward revenue," Mulligan says.

However, the analyst warns that HMV will have to take an "incredibly aggressive approach" to gain digital market share, with in-store marketing directing shoppers to better digital offers, even if that "accelerates the decline of the core business."

Fox says it's "too early" to reveal details of its new digital strategy, but he expects it will include a move into video and computer game downloads.

"We have the brand and the customers—what we don't have is a joined-up, integrated offer," Fox says. "It's important that we are present in all our product markets both physically and digitally." ••••

BY ANTONY BRUNO

Tim Schafer

DOUBLE FINE PRODUCTIONS PRESIDENT

The videogame veteran discusses the making of 'Brütal Legend' and working with Ozzy and Lemmy.

Amid the din of all the other music-based games being released this fall comes a decidedly unique twist on the convergence between music and videogames: "Brütal Legend."

Unlike the play-along focus of the "Guitar Hero" and "Rock Band" franchises, "Brütal Legend" offers a comedic fantasy homage to the world of heavy metal. It stars Jack Black as roadie Eddie Riggs and features appearances by Judas Priest frontman Rob Halford, Motörhead's Lemmy and Ozzy Osbourne. The game draws heavily on the imagery and lyrics of heavy metal albums at all levels—from plot to art direction to dialogue—and features a soundtrack of more than 100 songs.

The much-anticipated title is the brainchild of veteran game developer Tim Schafer, an unabashed heavy metal fanatic. The founder/president of Double Fine Productions has built a cult following in the videogame industry with such hits as "The Secret of Monkey Island" and "Psychonauts," leading to a great deal of hype and anticipation for the upcoming "Brütal Legend."

In an interview with Billboard, Schafer talks about how the title stands apart from the broader music-game genre, how music can rise above the level of a mere soundtrack and what he believes "Brütal Legend" has in common with Peter Jackson's "The Lord of the Rings" movies.

Did you set out to make an action/adventure game first or was it a music-led thing from the start?

It was a fantasy game inspired by the world of heavy metal album covers. When you look at those great illustrations on Iron Maiden or Diamond Head albums, there's an unbridled creativity there. They're not worried about something being too much, there's no worry about going over the top. They just threw everything on there that they thought looked awesome.

We wanted to create a world where you could go around every corner and see another heavy metal album cover. So then we wondered who we could drop into that world, and I always thought roadies were great characters that can do anything. At a moment's notice they can deal with unexpected situations and fix anything with duct tape.

Then the gameplay came out of what would satisfy that fantasy. You've got to have a broadax. Then give a guy a guitar for a ranged weapon and the combat just came out of that.

At what point did you start approaching artists and labels?

First we got Jack [Black] involved in the project. Early on when we were doing character design, we were inspired by Jack Black and the characters he plays where he just loves the music . . . just unironically loved rock for both its awesome side and its ridiculous side at the same time. He's just so sincere about it and we wanted Eddie Riggs to be like him.

We showed him our concept for the game and he agreed to do it on the spot. Once we had him, everyone could tell it was a legitimate thing. There have been a couple of heavy metal games but nothing that big. People could tell we were going to be the one to give a heavy metal game its rightful treatment. Then we got Lemmy and Rob Halford. We dealt with their management mostly for their name and likeness. Once you get the artist onboard, they can make things happen very quickly in terms of song approvals and stuff like that, because it was about them.

What do you mean by "rightful treatment"?

I feel like heavy metal games are like "Lord of the Rings" in a certain way, where for years people had done various versions of "Lord of the Rings" and it wasn't until Peter Jackson's version that someone decided to do it completely and do it right. I don't think anyone now wants to do their version of "Lord of the Rings." We wanted to be that ambitious with this.

What was it like working with icons like Ozzy Osbourne, Rob Halford and Lemmy?

Lemmy was pretty quiet at first and we were really intimidated because he was the first of the metal gods to come into the studio. It turns out he's really into ancient warfare and collecting swords and knives from old armies, and he's really into science fiction about alternative futures where modern warfare is fought with medieval weapons. He even invited me to his house to check out his knife collection. And it was awesome. He's just a really authentic guy. He's exactly what he appears to be like.

Then Ozzy just wanted to crack everybody up. He was really funny and good-natured. He had a lot of great stories about his album covers. I actually got to bring in my original vinyl copy of "Diary of a Madman"—which was the first album I ever bought—and have him sign it and ask him all these questions. If I knew when I was 14 that I would be having this conversation, I'd have died.

Did any of their ideas or feedback make it into the game?

I was talking to Ozzy because I hadn't written his character as one who swore that much. He plays the Guardian of Metal. So he'd say words like "bloody" instead, and I didn't think that sounded right. I just couldn't hold him back from swearing, and I didn't want to. So we just let it rip. And Ozzy was saying how he had watched the "Osbournes" show in the U.K., where they don't censor it, and it felt weird and wrong to him because he watched the American version so many times. He actually preferred the bleeped-out version because it makes the jokes funnier in some ways. So there's a thing in the beginning of the game where a pop-up asks you if you want the language or not.

At some point, Eddie flips off the camera and we put up a Parental Advisory warning right over the hand, which I think is another reference to heavy metal because of what we went through with Tipper Gore and the Parents Music Resource and the hearings.

How do you see "Brütal Legend" fitting into the broader convergence between the music and videogame industries?

You see a lot of interest by record labels in ways to get their songs in front of people in different ways, because they know videogames are stealing the attention of people who might otherwise be watching TV or listening to music. There's only 24 hours of the day and videogames are taking over more and more of those hours. So they want to get into that space and have their songs in there.

Is there room to make similar types of games based on genres other than heavy metal?

If I was doing one inspired by New Orleans jazz or something, I wouldn't necessarily make it an epic combat game. That just fits heavy metal.

You can showcase all kinds of music by making the right game for that music. [Videogames] tend to be a bit narrow in their focus and explore the same territory over and over again. Like World War II and space. Life is very broad and music covers all aspects of life. But videogames only cover a small portion of it. Videogames can only benefit by including more types of music and making more kinds of games that showcase that type of music. ••••

After Selling 20 Million Albums To The Housewife Demo, Michael Bublé Evolves Beyond Singing Slick Versions Of Classics On 'Crazy Love'

By Robert Thompson

Photographs By Ben Watts

Michael Bublé no longer wishes to be known only as "the new Sinatra." ¶ The 33-year-old Canadian crooner, best-known for his smooth takes on American pop standards, may reside in the shadow of Frank Sinatra and Tony Bennett. But the reality is, in many countries, he's equaled—or even exceeded—the popularity of his idols.

"I remember Tony Bennett coming up to me and saying, 'How did you break him in Italy? None of us—including Frank—managed that,' " says Dion Singer, London-based VP of international marketing for Warner Bros.

It's August, and the old/new Sinatra is in a downtown Vancouver conference room, surrounded by awards won by Bryan Adams, Martina McBride and Anne Murray, whose careers were guided by Bublé's legendary Canadian manager Bruce Allen, president of Bruce Allen Talent. He's here to talk about the release of his new album "Crazy Love" (143/Reprise)—due Oct. 9 in North America, Oct. 16 in Europe and Oct. 19 in the United Kingdom—and much else besides, from his love of ice hockey team the Vancouver Canucks to his recent high-profile breakup with British actress Emily Blunt.

Dressed casually in a dark T-shirt and jeans, unshaven and with his hair tousled, Bublé doesn't look like an international star. Yet he undoubtedly is one, one of the biggest Canada has produced. He's sold 20 million copies worldwide of his three studio albums, according to Warner Music. According to Nielsen SoundScan, he sold 1.9 million U.S. copies of his last album, 2007's "Call Me Irresponsible"; Canadian sales stand at 400,000. Since his 2003 self-titled debut, he's gone from housewives' favorite to the go-to guy for starlets in need of red carpet arm candy or talk-show hosts searching for a musical guest who gives good chat. He has hit No. 1 and sold out arenas everywhere from the Netherlands to Australia.

But none of that was enough for him. Bublé says he's taken more risks with "Crazy Love" than on his previous three albums combined. He talks earnestly and enthusiastically about embracing more soulful recording methods and selecting songs to fit his mood after the split with Blunt and about not playing things safe. If his last album was named "Call Me Irresponsible," the new one might well have been tagged "Call Me Introspective."

"I would definitely say I'm as nervous as I've ever been," he says with a laugh, as he takes off his jacket and tosses it on a nearby chair. "It would have probably been easier on me to have done the same thing. But if I can't grow, what am I going to do?"

"Crazy Love" diverges from his past work both thematically and sonically. The album offers a more eclectic, downbeat mix ranging from classics like "Stardust," through hits like Billy Vera's "At This Moment" and the Eagles' "Heartache Tonight," and a duet with soul singer Sharon Jones on the '60s hit "Baby (You Got What It Takes)." There are also two Bublé co-authored songs, including the poppy lead single "Haven't Met You Yet," written with regular collaborators Amy Foster-Gillies and Alan Chang.

"I went through a breakup," says Bublé, who's now dating Argentine actress Luisana Lopilato. "It was a tough year for me and there were songs I didn't even feel like singing. But I knew there were certain things in my life that inspired me, given the range of emotions I was going through, from sadness to anger to regret. So I looked at the songs I was thinking about and thought, 'I can totally dig into this.' "

But embracing less upbeat material wasn't the only shift for Bublé. He also wanted to break from the sound of his first three albums, all produced by David Foster and Humberto Gatica. Foster in particular wanted to continue the elaborate studio productions that made those records a success. But Bublé had other things in mind.

"I wanted things to be engineered differently," he says. "I wanted things to be mic'ed differently. I didn't want it to be sterile. I wanted it to have edge. I needed it to have soul because when I listen to Sinatra or [Count] Basie, that is rock. It may not have big guitars, but the drums bleed in and you feel it. David said, 'That's not what I do.' And I told him that was bullshit."

Bublé enjoyed working with Bob Rock on one song for "Call Me Irresponsible," so he brought the Metallica producer in to produce six tracks on the album, with Foster and Gatica helming the rest. The singer used a decidedly old-fashioned approach to recording with all three—cutting tracks with a live band to replicate the feel of playing onstage.

"I listen to Sinatra, [Elvis] Presley or the Beatles—well, those records feel good," he says. "They are not always perfect and I can hear some pitchy things happening, but this Auto-Tune generation, where everything has been made so perfect, has lost its feel."

Usually Bublé would head into the studio with Foster, work out the basic arrangement and sing "200 takes of a song," he says. The end result was perfect technically, but lacked the intangible qualities of his heroes' recordings.

"You can only hear so many times from people that you're better live than on record before you start thinking about it," he says. "Because I know in those shows I didn't hit all those notes perfectly, so what are they talking about? They are talking about a presence or a vibe they get."

Rock took Bublé to Brooklyn to record with Sharon Jones & the Dap-Kings, best-known for their work with Amy Winehouse. "We cut three songs in a day," Rock says. "Like all great artists, Michael seems to know what his audience needs."

Some would question why an artist with a run so far that has been as spectacularly unbroken as Bublé's would try to fix it. But the singer says he's been wrestling with the question of whether audiences will accept him throughout his career.

Inspired by '80s pop songs and classic big band and swing tracks he discovered in his grandfather's record collection, he was always decidedly out of step with the times, and few had high hopes for Bublé at the start. Foster helped finance his first album—which went on to sell 2.3 million copies in the United States, according to Nielsen SoundScan, and another 420,000 in Canada—but many still thought the guy singing "Summer Wind" and "Put Your Head on My Shoulder," was a fad.

"I understand why people looked at me and thought I was a one-hit wonder," he says. "But I was so happy to get my break that I didn't worry about it. I guess that's not true . . . I did worry about it, but it was the least of my worries after working for 11 years to get signed. Whoever it was at Warner that signed me figured I'd sell 100,000 records in my lifetime."

In fact, the follow-up, 2005's "It's Time," sold even better, selling 3.2 million stateside and 770,000 in Canada. But along the way, the singer found himself increasingly at odds with his public image.

"I was marketed in a way that was for the grandmas and the housewives," he says. "But it wasn't who I was. When the second and third records came out I'd talk to Bruce [Allen] and say, 'These people think I'm soft. But I'm not.' And Bruce would say, 'I know that, kid.' "

Reprise president/Warner Bros. Records COO Diarmuid Quinn says part of the issue was that Bublé's focus on standards wasn't exactly what radio was seeking.

Staggered Release Dates Help Bublé Promote Internationally

In America, Michael Bublé's career has grown big enough that he can play New York's Madison Square Garden, but Warner Music Group says his earliest breakthroughs outside of North America came in Europe and South Africa. With that in mind, the major is staggering the international release for "Crazy Love" to allow the singer to make personal and TV appearances close to the release date across Canada, the United Kingdom, Europe, Australia and the United States.

Bublé has a global reach to rival any pop superstar, with his last album, "Call Me Irresponsible," hitting No. 1 in Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands and Australia. It was also No. 1 on Billboard's European Top 100 Albums chart.

From Oct. 16 to the end of the month, Bublé will make promotional trips to Germany, England, France and Italy. He'll visit Australia for TV appearances on "Today" and "60 Minutes."

"There's nothing that sells Michael's albums better than having Michael in person in these countries," says Dion Singer, London-based VP of international marketing for Warner Bros.

Canada will also enjoy access to its native son in the days prior to the album launch, with Bublé in the country Oct. 7, 8 and 10 for key media appearances, including TV slots on CBC, CTV and Canwest and print interviews with the Canwest newspaper chain.

"We've never had him around near the street date of the last two albums," says Warner Music Canada VP of marketing Dale Kotyk. "We're trying to touch every major media outlet in the country in some form." —RT

Additional reporting by Mark Sutherland in London.

"One of the reasons Michael probably feels that way is because his career wasn't built in the way of a normal pop star," Quinn says. "He was always a bit outside of the mainstream, a little bit outside of pop radio."

Instead, Reprise tapped into Bublé's reputation as an engaging live performer, a skill honed during his days as a struggling singer playing anywhere people would have him.

"It was through constant touring that people bought into him," Quinn says. "It was a gradual process, but he has built a career that will have longevity. I'd be surprised if he isn't around singing in 30 years."

TV also plays a key role in Bublé's enduring success, with his onstage charisma effortlessly extending to interviews and personal appearances.

"The audiences we found for Michael early on were the audiences that were available to us," Quinn says. "We used a lot of TV, and TV appearances on morning shows tend to skew a little bit to an older crowd."

Quinn says Bublé's audience demographic is now notably younger than in the past, but daytime TV remains a key part of the "Crazy Love" campaign. The album's off-cycle Friday release date is due in part to an appearance that day on "The Oprah Winfrey Show," while he'll also star on "Today" Oct. 13 and has a "Dancing With the Stars" slot booked. In the United Kingdom, he'll appear on "The X Factor," "Live From Abbey Road" and "The Graham Norton Show"; in Germany he's booked for "TV Total."

"He can sell as many albums sitting on a couch giving interviews as he can performing," Allen says.

Warner wants to improve his performance at radio, where things picked up when "Home"—which he co-wrote for "It's Time" with Foster-Gillies and Chang—hit No. 1 on Billboard's Adult Contemporary chart in 2005. Two Bublé co-writes, "Everything" and "Lost," were singles off "Call Me Irresponsible" that peaked at Nos. 1 and 2, respectively, on that chart.

"One of the main reasons the demographics for Michael's audience have changed is because of his songs," Quinn says. "As he's gotten more and more radio play, we've seen things change."

Now Warner wants "Haven't Met You Yet" to become a crossover success. Serviced to radio Aug. 31, it's made a strong start at AC formats in Canada and in the United States. It was the first track to debut atop Billboard's Adult Contemporary chart in Canada (Billboard.biz, Sept. 10), and in the United States, it debuted at No. 22 on the Adult Contemporary chart, No. 33 on Hot Digital Songs and No. 65 on the Billboard Hot 100.

Warner hopes to work the single to top 40 stations, with Warner Music Canada VP of marketing Dale Kotyk noting that many hot AC stations in North America have flipped to an urban/top 40 focus in recent years. Meanwhile, in the United Kingdom, Warner's Singer cites support from commercial top 40 networks Capital FM, Heart and Magic as proof the tide is turning.

"We're seeing a lot of uptake on stations that never played Michael before," he says. "It gives us that mass airplay of stations that was missing in the past."

Allen expects the singer's 2010 tour to also garner a new audience. "We're already very solid in women in their mid-20s all the way up," Allen says. "But the guys get taken to the show and they come out loving him as well."

"I want people to invite me in," Bublé says. "Especially now that my big fat head is on a 60-foot screen at my shows. I think of an arena show like the TV shows I've done. It's fun—and they can see everything. When my trombone player gives me the finger, they pick it up."

But don't expect Bublé to ditch the standards in favor of an album of all original material just yet. Neither Allen nor Quinn seems to provide much support for the idea, though Bublé says he could do it as "a concept."

"[Standards] are part of who I am," he says. "For me it is cool to be able to do both. Is it more important to be perceived as the best at what you do or the only one who does something?"

Few would pinpoint Bublé's career as being characterized by risk-taking. But, as other artists clamber aboard the standards bandwagon, he is—if not exactly jumping off, then at least contemplating an exit strategy. He does so buoyed by the knowledge that he's won the respect of the people who inspired him, with Allen recalling a recent encounter in London with former Warner Bros. president Mo Austin.

"He said, 'That Bublé kid is the real deal,' " Allen says. "That means a lot. After all, Mo is the guy behind Sinatra."

Of course, doing things his way undoubtedly has its risks. While his management and label are convinced that bigger opportunities and larger audiences are on the horizon, Bublé senses this album could yet polarize his audience.

"There's the nervousness and trepidation of wondering how people will react, that's for sure," he says, leaning back in his chair. "If I'm lucky enough to carry the torch of my idols and keep the Great American Songbook alive, then it is partly my responsibility to move forward. That's one of the things that excites me most." ••••

THE HOTTEST BR

KISS HAS ROCKED MERCH FOR 35 YEARS—AND NOW THE BAND IS CONTINUING ITS DYNASTY WITH WAL-MART

BY RAY WADDELL

Kiss realized the power of merch from day one. At an industry coming-out party before they even had a record deal, band members made their own Kiss glitter T-shirts and made sure their female fans were wearing them in the front row.

Today, Kiss continues its reign among the merchandising elite—for decades, Kiss fans have been there, done that and got the T-shirts. As well as the mugs, comic books, condoms and coffins. Live Nation Merchandise, which oversees the band's merch and licensing business, says Kiss grossed more than $500 million in the past 35 years—more than any other rock band when tour merch, retail licensing, online and international sales are combined.

"There are four or five huge artists in rock merchandise: the Beatles, Kiss, AC/DC, the Rolling Stones and then sometimes it's Pink Floyd or Bob Marley," says Dell Furano, CEO of Live Nation Merchandise. Perhaps making the ubiquity of the band's merch even more impressive, Kiss' catalog album sales and touring revenue don't match competitors like the Beatles, AC/DC or the Stones.

So what do these top band brands have in common? "They're all a little bit different, but what they have in common is great artwork, great logos and their music goes from generation to generation to generation," Furano says. "We sell as many kids' shirts and toddler shirts as anything."

With Kiss, the focus on merchandising began in the band's earliest days, tapping into the makeup-wearing, fire-breathing theatrical panache that was arguably on equal footing with the music. It's hard to imagine a major rock concert today without tables of hoodies and shirts, but Kiss was definitely ahead of the curve with merch innovations, according to Furano, one of the founding fathers of the modern tour merch business.

"Kiss truly did understand the potential here," Furano says. "The music that came out of the San Francisco music scene in the late '60s was very noncommercial. But Kiss was always about theatrics and visuals, and the merchandise just fit with them naturally. It was a part of who they were."

"Why not our brand instead of something nondescript?" founding member Gene Simmons asks. "There's nothing like this. Thirty-five years later, believe it or not, the band is actually doubling in size. And I don't mean our weight, I mean our fan base."

That attention to merchandising remains a priority for Simmons (who has his own broad and diverse merch portfolio) and co-founder Paul Stanley. "Gene and Paul are the most savvy marketers we have ever dealt with," says Randy Phillips, CEO of AEG Live, producer of Kiss' current Sonic Boom North American tour. "They know their brand and why it is so resilient, and they are relentless workers."

Simmons, very much an entrepreneur for Kiss and his personal branding endeavors—and known for his sense of humor about the branding side of the industry—refers to the range of Kiss products on the market as covering "condoms to coffins. We get you coming and going," he's fond of saying. Today the Kiss portfolio includes more than 5,000 products and designs, including what Live Nation says is the largest selection of rock T-shirts ever offered.

Still, Simmons says there are places where Kiss won't go in terms of merchandising and licensing the Kiss name to products. "No crack. No cigarettes. No heavy booze," he says. "Otherwise, it's completely open. And why not?"

For decades, rock'n'roll purists have hammered Kiss as sellouts and money-mongers—Simmons' own line of merchandise is under the Moneybag banner—but Team Kiss could care less what detractors think. Basically, they say, if there wasn't demand, there wouldn't be products for sale.

"It's a brand. It's all about getting stuff to people that they want," Kiss manager Doc McGhee says. "We're not pretentious and we don't believe that we should be out there saving the world because we put together a rock band. We think it's fun. It's like Mattel."

Fun, sure, but "it's big business and they do it very, very well," says McGhee, a colorful veteran rock manager who joined Kiss when the band first reunited in the early '90s. "They had a huge catalog of merchandise when I came along. We just resparked it and tried to broaden it out a little bit and made sure that it kept the same strategic plan of Kiss, offering quality products."

When it comes to products, there are plenty and more coming (see story, page 24). McGhee says the band has licensed more than 2,700 items through the years.

Kiss is a brand that inspires loyalty and commerce on similar footing with the biggest sports teams and celebrities in the world. "If you go to a New York Yankees store and then a Kiss shop, you'll see they have the same products that people love," Furano says. "Every type of mug and wall art and skateboards, you name it."

The deal with Wal-Mart, built around the retailer's exclusive release of the band's new "Sonic Boom" album, will jumpstart the Kiss merchandising bus (billboard.com, Aug. 17). Beginning Oct. 6, there will be three Kiss merchandise kiosks in 2,300 Wal-Mart and Sam's Club stores across the country, according to McGhee.

In Wal-Mart stores there will be two endcaps in the Halloween season section; one endcap will hold the new CD plus catalog albums and the second will hold T-shirts and Halloween makeup. In all Wal-Mart locations, there will be an eight-foot side counter in the music department with the new CD plus catalog, fleece throws, Mr. Potato Head toys and Kiss M&Ms.

The Kiss M&Ms are part of a licensing deal between the band and Mars Snackfood U.S. Mars Snackfood spokesman Ryan Bowling says the Kiss relationship includes not only the My M&Ms personalized candies program, but the long-running "Inner M" advertising campaign as well. (While the tiny candies are steeped in rock'n'roll lore, particularly those of a certain color, the Kiss program embraces all colors, green included.)

ND IN THE LAND

The custom Kiss M&Ms blend—each representing a different band member's face—will be sold exclusively at Wal-Mart for a limited time until product runs out; the price is $6.99 per 7 oz. bag. "It's licensing from a formal sense, but it's mutual in that Kiss was very proactive about coming to us and expressing interest," Bowling says.

Along with the endcaps and side counters in various departments, Wal-Mart will also carry men's and women's T-shirts; Halloween masks, wigs and makeup; fleece blankets; trading cards; action figures; juniors' loungewear and sleepwear; and Mr. Potato Heads. The nonmusic merchandise is approximately a $10 million retail program, according to Furano.

"The Wal-Mart deal is a big play because it's not just about putting the record out, it's about putting Kiss out," Furano says. "The record is fantastic, it stands on its own, but I love the fact that we're doing an entire launch of Kiss at Wal-Mart, with merchandise and records."

The Kiss merch array includes a combination of tour, retail and online sales and cross marketing through all three distribution channels.

Always low prices and long tongues: a Kiss-branded Wal-Mart endcap

"I live maybe a half mile from Paul and a half mile from Gene, so I do merchandise house calls all the time," says Furano, who has worked with the band since the Lick It Up tour in 1983. He lobbied Stanley and Simmons for eight years before convincing them to sign with what was then Furano's Winterland Productions. "They're both highly involved in everything Kiss and Kiss merchandise."

And while rock'n'roll may be a young man's game, history has its advantages. Retro is definitely in when it comes to merch, and melding the old with the new is highly effective. "A bigger trend is going on, and Kiss is a great example, where we're developing new artwork tied to 'Sonic Boom,' and we're going back through all the images of the past and essentially giving them different looks for 'Destroyer,' different looks for 'Rock and Roll Over,' re-creating the whole line of merchandising from past albums and tours," Furano says.

The first line of attack with the merch catalog is online, "because each artist now is essentially their own online emporium that sells all of their products," Furano says. "The fans now know that they can go there to get the best selection. They know to go there if there's an announcement of a new tour or record."

In a market that includes a Kiss fragrance; a Kiss Coffeehouse in Myrtle Beach, S.C.; Kiss bingo games; Kiss motorcycle helmets; pool cues; dart boards; mobile device covers; and M&Ms, the possibility of oversaturating the marketplace with Kiss stuff doesn't worry Simmons, who believes that there isn't any law of diminishing returns when it comes to offering up Kiss products.

"The world is such a big place, whenever you go into a supermarket, look at all the Kellogg's products that are out there," Simmons says by way of example. "Are they saturating the market? There's so much stuff in the world you can create an entire lifestyle brand from the first suckle of mama's milk to the last gasp of air in your Kiss Kasket and never overextend yourself. You can't name a single product of any kind that's overexposed." ••••

THE RIGHT STUFF

AS MUSIC SALES FALL, MERCHANDISING RIGHTS TAKE CENTER STAGE IN 360 DEALS

BY RAY WADDELL

Some see 360 deals as the saviors of the industry, allowing an artist to counterbalance falling album sales with solid touring revenue. And while touring often serves as the lynchpin of such contracts, merchandise is becoming more important.

The merch business used to be based at concerts. But sales in retail outlets and online are growing, providing new opportunities for revenue. This growth means merch rights is getting more attention as more artists sign multirights deals.

Mat Vlasic, VP of merchandising for a division of Sony Records known as the Thread Shop, says merch rights now come up every time an act signs or extends a contract.

"I wouldn't say we wouldn't sign an act without [merch rights], but obviously to be able to work with our artists on all of their business endeavors is what we want to do," Vlasic says. "We're not just sharing in [merch], we're doing it. We want to be a one-stop shop for them. To piggy-back off the marketing dollars the label is going to spend makes sense in this day and age."

In handling merch for all Sony Music imprints, "we work with them to acquire the [merch] rights, and when we acquire the rights we service it just as a product manager services the music," Vlasic says. He notes that the Thread Shop roster includes between 30 and 40 acts, creating tour, online and retail merch for Legacy artists like Johnny Cash and Miles Davis to contemporary artists like T-Pain and Pitbull.

But labels are jockeying with international promoters like Live Nation and AEG Live—as well as mega managers like Front Line and Red Light—as to who can negotiate the terms of the best multirights deal.

Live Nation is on the leading edge in making merch a key component of multirights deals with such acts as Madonna, Jay-Z, U2, Shakira and Nickelback. The global promoter has been highly aggressive in the merch game, acquiring all or part of companies that create, sell and distribute it like Trunk, Anthill Trading and Signatures Network, along with fulfillment/direct-to-fan leaders MusicToday and UltraStar.

This kind of deal dates to promoter Michael Cohl's 1989 deal with the Rolling Stones, which included merch along with global promotion rights. "The advantage to the artist then as now is that they feel they are getting guaranteed top dollar, much of it upfront, and only needing to deal with one party," independent merchandiser Steve Gerstman says.

Merch trailblazer Dell Furano is CEO of Live Nation Merchandise and says three components drive the trend: merch is a promotional tool—"There's no better promotion than people walking around years later wearing that same Grateful Dead shirt"—it generates a solid profit margin for artists, and it's an opportunity to cross-promote across developing platforms like social networks.

"Today you bundle," Furano says. "That's the biggest thing that's really changed here. The artist managers really understand the value of the cross-promotion of these franchises. It's all one entity—music and live performance and publishing and merchandising and online—they're all spokes of the wheel."

When the promoter is also the merchandiser, the process is "more collaborative," Furano says. With a U2 or Madonna tour, "we can work with the other divisions of Live Nation," he says. "When you're promoting the tour, you get another level of cooperation across the board in terms how to get out what's available on a more timely basis, making certain we have the proper amount of merchandise stands at the venue, making certain the security the promoters will hire will help us with the bootlegging."

On Madonna's record-setting Sticky & Sweet tour, her first under the 10-year Live Nation deal, such collaboration made everything work more efficiently, Furano says. "A big part of the sales are online, and we use the same e-mail list for the ticket buyers at Live Nation to also promote the merch at her Web site."

Increasingly, merch, branding, licensing and ticketing are orchestrated through the rapidly expanding music Web portal LiveNation.com—and the proposed merger with the Irving Azoff-led Ticketmaster Entertainment puts this Internet strategy on steroids.

Vlasic says Sony has taken a different path than Live Nation or Universal Music Group (see story, page 26). "We didn't go out and buy Bravado or Signatures," he says. "The nature of our business is little different. As the labels break acts, then we'll be in a great position. Our foremost priority is getting all the current acts we're signing into these broader deals so we can help them in different ways."

So where do these deals leave independent merch firms? In a tough competitive position. "I believe you can analyze what a big company can bring to bear on a merchandise offer by simply looking at advance and guarantee, perhaps even more than royalty rate," says Gerstman, founder of the new model merch firm Cut Merch and longtime vendor for Eric Clapton. "With deeper pockets than the indies, and a stronger stomach for gambles, the majors have an advantage with many artists."

For an artist, a big merch deal may mean paying too much to control market share; this is a charge often levied by independent promoters when that business consolidated.

Such a dynamic can lead to a bidding situation for merch rights, and "oftentimes, the desire for an advance and guarantee will mean that the only bidders in this situation will be the majors," Gerstman says. "Whether a major or an indie gets the tour, most of the money will favor the artist, and the merch company will have to get by with minimal margins. With less competitive tours, the merch companies can frequently improve their margins, due to lesser competition."

Independent merch companies get and keep their clients by nurturing key relationships with artists or offering a different model, "one that emphasizes bigger back-end earnings and better service," Gerstman says. "The argument that the indies make over and over is that the big companies will not make them as much money as they can earn, though not upfront, and that they can't possibly get the same level of attention by a bigger company running dozens of tours at one time in a more impersonal way."

Pinky Gonzales, director of marketing for Goodletteseville, Tenn.-based merchandiser Richards & Southern, says that it can be challenging to win new business when labels and promoters are including merch arrangements in their deals.

Richards & Southern, whose clients include Taylor Swift, Kenny Chesney, George Strait and Sugarland, now compete by complementing their traditional tour merch business with ramped-up digital marketing efforts, including launching a retail Facebook application that gives each R&S client a storefront featuring select items from their merch catalog.

"Our job is to make sure that they are aware of us in the first place and to demonstrate our ability to provide a more personalized service faster and usually for a better price than the default alternatives," Gonzales says. ••••

BRAVADO PREPARES A MERCH BLITZ FOR THE ROLLING STONES AND MICHAEL JACKSON'S ESTATE

BY RAY WADDELL

The mere mention of two particular acts illustrates the type of year it has been for the international merchandising/licensing firm Bravado: Michael Jackson and the Rolling Stones.

Bravado inked exclusive, wide-ranging deals with both acts in recent months in what CEO Tom Bennett calls "the biggest year not only in our history, but probably in music merchandise history."

Nailing down these two acts speaks volumes about Bravado's role as Universal Music Group's (UMG) global merchandising division. Bravado is Live Nation's closest merch competitor in terms of size, geographic scope, experience and financial resources. The company has offices in London, Los Angeles, New York, Berlin, Paris, Tokyo and Sydney and has a presence in more than 40 countries. Traditionally, merch deals are set up as advances versus royalties, with the bigger artists rating the heftiest advances and most favorable royalty rates. That's still the case today for most artists.

But Bravado, like other merch companies today, is structuring a wide range of deals, individually attuned to each artist. For competitive reasons, details of these deals are proprietary.

Bravado—which was acquired as part of UMG's purchase of Sanctuary in 2007—does merch for Paul McCartney, Kanye West, Beyoncé, No Doubt, Nickelback, Lady GaGa, Katy Perry, Elton John, Guns N' Roses, Metallica, Led Zeppelin, Iron Maiden, Green Day and the Killers, among many others, making it far more than the merch arm of a label.

"We basically are a stand-alone company," Bennett says. "The fact that we're owned by Universal and have the ability to use resources we wouldn't be able to use before is fabulous. But fundamentally, Universal wants to build us as a really strong, independent, stand-alone business."

The diversity and high profile of the roster, which tilts more toward non-UMG acts, creates leverage in the aggregate. "When you go through it all, there's a real opportunity to put together a real body of rights here," Bennett says. "And that means when we go out to retailers we've got a great offering, which means we can put together a bigger retail program, which only helps us get into more of the right places and hopefully generate more income, which ultimately is the endgame."

Like most major merch companies, Bravado represents artists on the road, at retail through third-party agreements and by overseeing and fulfilling e-commerce for the artists' merch online. The difference—beyond the geographic scope of Bravado's influence that the UMG relationship brings—is the company's still-to-be revealed plan to change how merch is cross-promoted and bundled with music content.

These changes will come into play as soon as the fourth quarter with the Rolling Stones. The recent pact between UMG and the band, which covers future albums by the group and one of the most important catalogs in rock, opened the door for the merch deal.

During a nine-month period, multiple meetings took place on combining music and merch on a worldwide basis with retail and direct-to-consumer online. "We all believe—Universal, Bravado and the band—that for a band like the Stones, opportunities exist that have never happened before," Bennett says. "We were also able to back up and show them that on the traditional merchandising we're second to none, and we've got very wide retail reach and distribution worldwide." Because of the UMG connection, Bravado is now in business in 44 territories.

Given that a tour isn't currently scheduled, the Bravado/Stones deal is limited to retail and direct-to-consumer, though if the band does go on the road, specific touring merch could be a part of the deal in the future. The pact is exclusive and supercedes a longstanding merch deal the band had with Anthill Trading that came about through the Stones' equally longstanding promoter deal with Michael Cohl.

Bennett calls the Stones "the perfect band" to launch new products and areas of distribution. "They have a huge business in apparel stores as varied as H&M and Bloomingdale's and JCPenney, and there's an awful lot of interest in their products," he says. "We believe that by marketing and putting the products together—and coming out with some unique and different combinations of stuff—that we can not only sell more merch but we can also sell more music in nontraditional retailers."

Calling it "bundling" is an oversimplification, Bennett says. "It's bundling, but in a slightly hipper and more fashionable way, not just the idea of throwing a T-shirt in with a CD," he says. "It's a great way for kids that have historically connected with the band, the logo and the merchandise to connect the dots—a way for them to hear some of the great music that this band has made for more than 40 years."

The ideas that will be implemented with the Stones, some of which come from the band, are "model-changing," Bennett says, although he declines to give specifics. "They've always done things differently. I think that's what excites them," he says. "There's no dragging the horse to water here. They're right there—all they did was find a willing partner."

AND THEN CAME JACKSON

The merch/licensing relationship with the Michael Jackson estate springs from Bravado's earlier designation as official merchandiser for the artist's ill-fated 50-show This Is It run at London's O2 Arena produced by AEG Live. "We were just starting to get into business with them, and then there was the sad occurrence of [Jackson's] demise," Bennett says. "At that point in time, I think everybody, including the estate, felt that we were best poised to be the merchandising party because we had the opportunity to meet with Michael a couple of times and he had approved a lot of our products."

Bennett believes Jackson would have delivered "big time" at the O2 had the shows taken place and done huge merch business in the process. "We were more than excited to be doing the deal before, and in a weird way we're honored we've been selected by the estate," he says.

The team at Bravado is convinced Jackson's worldwide appeal could make his licensing as popular and international as Elvis or Marilyn Monroe. "Quite possibly Michael in this era is the first of the music stars who has died that is that huge, who has traveled and played in pretty much every country in the world," Bennett says. "He is massive in Japan, massive in Australia, massive everywhere in Europe and in Asia—a very big worldwide superstar."

Now, working with the Jackson estate is a legacy-based enterprise. "We have some great licensing deals already that are very interesting and also some that are being pulled together right now and finalized," Bennett says. "There is going to be the right amount of licensing opportunities that will be executed totally based not on money, but on product, and making sure the product suits the image Michael had."

Bravado has been named the exclusive worldwide merchandiser by Sony Pictures Entertainment for the Jackson film "This Is It," out Oct. 28. Each Bravado office around the world is partnering with local retailers for a number of marketing initiatives. In the United States, Bravado is partnering with Hot Topic, which will do window displays and ticket giveaways leading up to the film's release; in London, Bravado is partnering with HMV, which will set up Jackson boutiques within its stores, as well as signage and window displays.

Bravado also will be providing the Jackson merch to other key retailers including Target, Old Navy and JCPenney.

While Bravado historically was a tour merch company, its retail influence is broad and deep, and Bennett believes the company is now poised to revolutionize the direct-to-consumer model. "The whole [direct-to-consumer] space is a huge opportunity, and thus far most people have made mistakes there [in connecting the dots]," he says. "And I do think this coming year we're going to make a real concerted effort to maximize the growth and opportunities for artists in that area. I think we have a lot of clever ideas and unique new products."

In general for Bravado artists, it's about synergizing the music with the merchandise, as with the Metallica boxed set that came out last year that included the album, a "making of" DVD and merch. "We've got products coming out this fourth quarter going further with vinyl, T-shirts, unique packaging, a very collectible piece," Bennett says. "And the initial reach into retail [shows] they love the product. They're going at it quite big, very aggressively, buying more of this combined package than they probably would have of a vinyl [record] or a T-shirt separately. They see the added value there."

Bravado also plans to market its merch initiatives in unique ways. In London the company hired Tony Harlow, a veteran of the UMG international marketing department and former CEO of V2 as managing director for Bravado in the United Kingdom and Europe.

"With his whole outlook at life and understanding retail and marketing, we're poised to do some great things," Bennett says. "Retail is a different environment than concerts, where merchandise is almost an impulse buy. At retail, the better you can make the product, the more correct places you can put it, the better position, the better it looks, the better the business is." ...

Masters of Merch

BEHIND THE LOGOS

IF THE CLOTHES MAKE THE MAN, DO THE SYMBOLS MAKE THE MERCHANDISE?

For a band that never sold more than a million copies of a single album, the Ramones have a lot of very public fans. Beachgoers roam the shore in Ramones flip-flops, babies get carried around in Ramones onesies, and college kids and yuppies alike can be found in the band's ubiquitous black T-shirts. A former Ramones merch manager told Spin that between 1996 and 2008 the band sold 1.5 million T-shirts—and that's not counting onesies, flip-flops or other items, or any of the bootleg shirts circulating in concert arena parking lots all over the country. By then, of course, the band's modest commercial heyday was already behind it, but its take-off of the presidential seal— with an eagle holding an olive branch and a baseball bat—had become iconic. ¶ "At a certain level, the logo becomes less about the band," says Michael Bierut of Pentagram Design, "and more about a series of lifestyle choices." ¶ A logo can't make or break a band, of course—it might not even help sell albums or concert tickets. But the right logo can take merch revenue to the next level—and provide valuable viral promotion when it's carved into middle-school desks. ¶ In that spirit, Billboard presents the origins of some of rock's most memorable logos, as well as expert opinions on why they've rocked audiences for decades.

—Cortney Harding

RAMONES

BACK STORY: New York artist Arturo Vega created this logo based on a self-portrait in which he wore a belt buckle with an image the presidential seal. On a trip to Washington, D.C., Vega decided to play off the presidential symbol, substituting the members' names for the official text.

EXPERT OPINION: "It has such an irony about it," says Brett Kilroe of design outfit Runner Collective. "It feels so authoritative and also has such a familiarity in its aesthetic, while in actuality it does a great job mocking all that it represents in just the right way."

TATTOO POTENTIAL: Medium—unless you're willing to get it large enough to make sure all the names are legible.

ROLLING STONES

BACK STORY: Though many fans assume the Stones' lips logo was based on Mick Jagger's mouth, designer John Pasche says he was inspired by an image of the Hindu goddess Kali. When he designed the logo in 1971, he was paid £50; the band gave him £200 more a few years later. Even though the Stones copyrighted the image, Pasche made £400,000 in 2006 when he sold the original artwork.

EXPERT OPINION: "I've worked with Mick Jagger, and he knows a lot about branding and marketing," says designer Stefan Sagmeister, who has worked with the Talking Heads and Lou Reed. "This is something that looks good on baseball caps and jackets. They do a different set of lips for each tour, so they keep the concept, but do enough to make it different each time."

TATTOO POTENTIAL: High—and recognized worldwide.

AC/DC

BACK STORY: Designer Gerard Huerta riffed on the band's original, Australian logo and his design work for Blue Öyster Cult when he created this image. He has said the style was influenced by Los Angeles barrio graffiti as well as the heavy metal aesthetic of the day.

EXPERT OPINION: "From a design perspective, this is very one-dimensional," Sagmeister says. But that may be the point: The logo is simple enough that Kilroe says he was able to draw it blindfolded in middle school.

TATTOO POTENTIAL: High—and easy for anyone to draw.

PUBLIC ENEMY

BACK STORY: Chuck D says he was influenced by rock groups and sports teams when he created his group's logo of a B-boy in the crosshairs of a rifle. "I took a silhouette of E-Love, LL Cool J's right hand man, and put the crosshairs over him," he says. "A lot of people thought it was a silhouette of a state trooper, but it's meant to symbolize the average black male. It was important for us to have a logo. I wanted our logo to be as recognizable as Batman."

EXPERT OPINION: "From a basic visual point of view, it is by design, a target, which certainly attracts attention," Kilroe says. "Targets are symbols that are widely used in visual communication and often suggest danger, and it seems to me the that the intent of this logo was just that. It is aggressive and confrontational in the same way the music is."

TATTOO POTENTIAL: Medium.

BLACK FLAG

BACK STORY: Another band with unremarkable sales (none of its albums ever sold more than 200,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan) but an instantly recognizable logo, Black Flag has inspired endless graffiti. Designed by artist Raymond Pettibon, brother of songwriter Greg Ginn, it was meant to contrast sharply with the white flag of surrender.

EXPERT OPINION: "It's a very clever visual hierarchy," Sagmeister says. "It's catchy—you see the stripes immediately. It's a case where a single visual artist defined the visual presence of a band."

TATTOO POTENTIAL: High, unfortunately. There's only one Henry Rollins—get over it.

THE TOURING AND MERCHANDISING POWERHOUSE IS BACK WITH 'SONIC BOOM'

THE LOYAL LEGION

KISS FANS FUEL BAND'S ENDURING GLOBAL SUCCESS

THEY'RE CALLED THE Kiss Army and they are legion. ■ Kiss co-founder Gene Simmons specifically dates the origins of the rabid fan base known as the Kiss Army to 1975 in Terre Haute, Ind., of all places (see Q&A, page 34). ■ Regardless of when and where it began, this army has legs and its loyalty is unquestioned. This is a dedicated fan base that packs concerts around the globe and has created an unparalleled marketplace for some 5,000 licensed Kiss merchandise items.

"You can try to explain it, we can talk about the games and the toys and this and that," Simmons says, "but if it's as simple as that, then everybody would try to do it. It's not a paint-by-numbers sort of thing. Either they connect with you somehow or they don't."

They connect with Kiss. Thirty-five years after the release of the band's self-titled debut album, the Kiss Army marches on. It continues to build, weathering changes in popular culture and all sorts of musical trends.

"And if critics have a problem with it, they're going to be crunched up and become fertilizer," Simmons says. "Our fans number in the millions. You have something to say to us, you better talk to the bosses first. They call themselves the Kiss Army. Good luck with that, by the way."

However hard it is to pin down the reasoning behind it, Kiss hasn't generated this sort of dedication by accident, according to those who work with the band.

"The loyalty of the Kiss Army is in direct relationship to the care and attention that Gene and [co-founder] Paul [Stanley] have paid to them over the years," says Randy Phillips, CEO of AEG Live, promoter of Kiss' current tour, Kiss Alive/35. "They stepped up big time on this tour and were really felt in the viral Web marketing campaign," Phillips says.

The tour opened in March 2008 in Australia, continued through that summer in Europe, began a South American leg in April and its U.S. leg starts Sept. 25 at Detroit's Cobo Hall.

Kiss on Oct. 6 releases "Sonic Boom," a three-disc set that includes new material, a rerecorded 15-track greatest-hits CD, a live DVD shot in Buenos Aires during the band's recent South American tour and a 20-page booklet. The set will be available exclusively at Wal-Mart and its affiliated Sam's Club stores.

The early growth of the Kiss Army surely was fueled by an "us against them" mentality among fans. Radio didn't play Kiss in the early going, critics lambasted the band, and the music business elite ignored it.

But word-of-mouth about the act's shows began to spread with its first national tour in 1974, and the band was selling out stadiums before it had its first hit with the live version of "Rock and Roll All Nite" in 1975, which peaked at No. 12 on the Billboard Hot 100.

A potent blend of greasepaint, fire, blood, pyro and hydraulics led to more sold-out shows and eventually platinum-level success for the "Destroyer" album in 1976. (In the years since, according to Kiss, the band has cumulatively sold more than 100 million albums worldwide.)

By 1980, Kiss was everywhere or, as Simmons puts it, "We owned your children."

The bond between Kiss and its fans survived solo projects, lineup changes, and the disappearance and subsequent return of the trademark makeup.

Kiss manager Doc McGhee witnessed this unique fan/band relationship firsthand in the '80s when bands he managed at the time like Bon Jovi and Mötley Crüe faced the daunting task of opening for Kiss. When McGhee became manager of continued on >>p32 from >>p30 Kiss with the reunion tour in 1996 he learned even more about the Kiss Army. "The loyalty of the Kiss Army is phenomenal," he says. Thanks to the makeup and costumes and the characters they portray, Kiss onstage today look pretty much the same as the band did in 1974. The Kiss Army "grows generation by generation by generation, and probably the biggest reason for it is they've never changed," McGhee says. "They're like Mickey Mouse. He's never changed—he looks the same as he did 100 years ago. That identification of the brand and the makeup of Kiss doesn't get old, so young kids are into it just like young kids were into it in 1974. It's a timeless type of band."

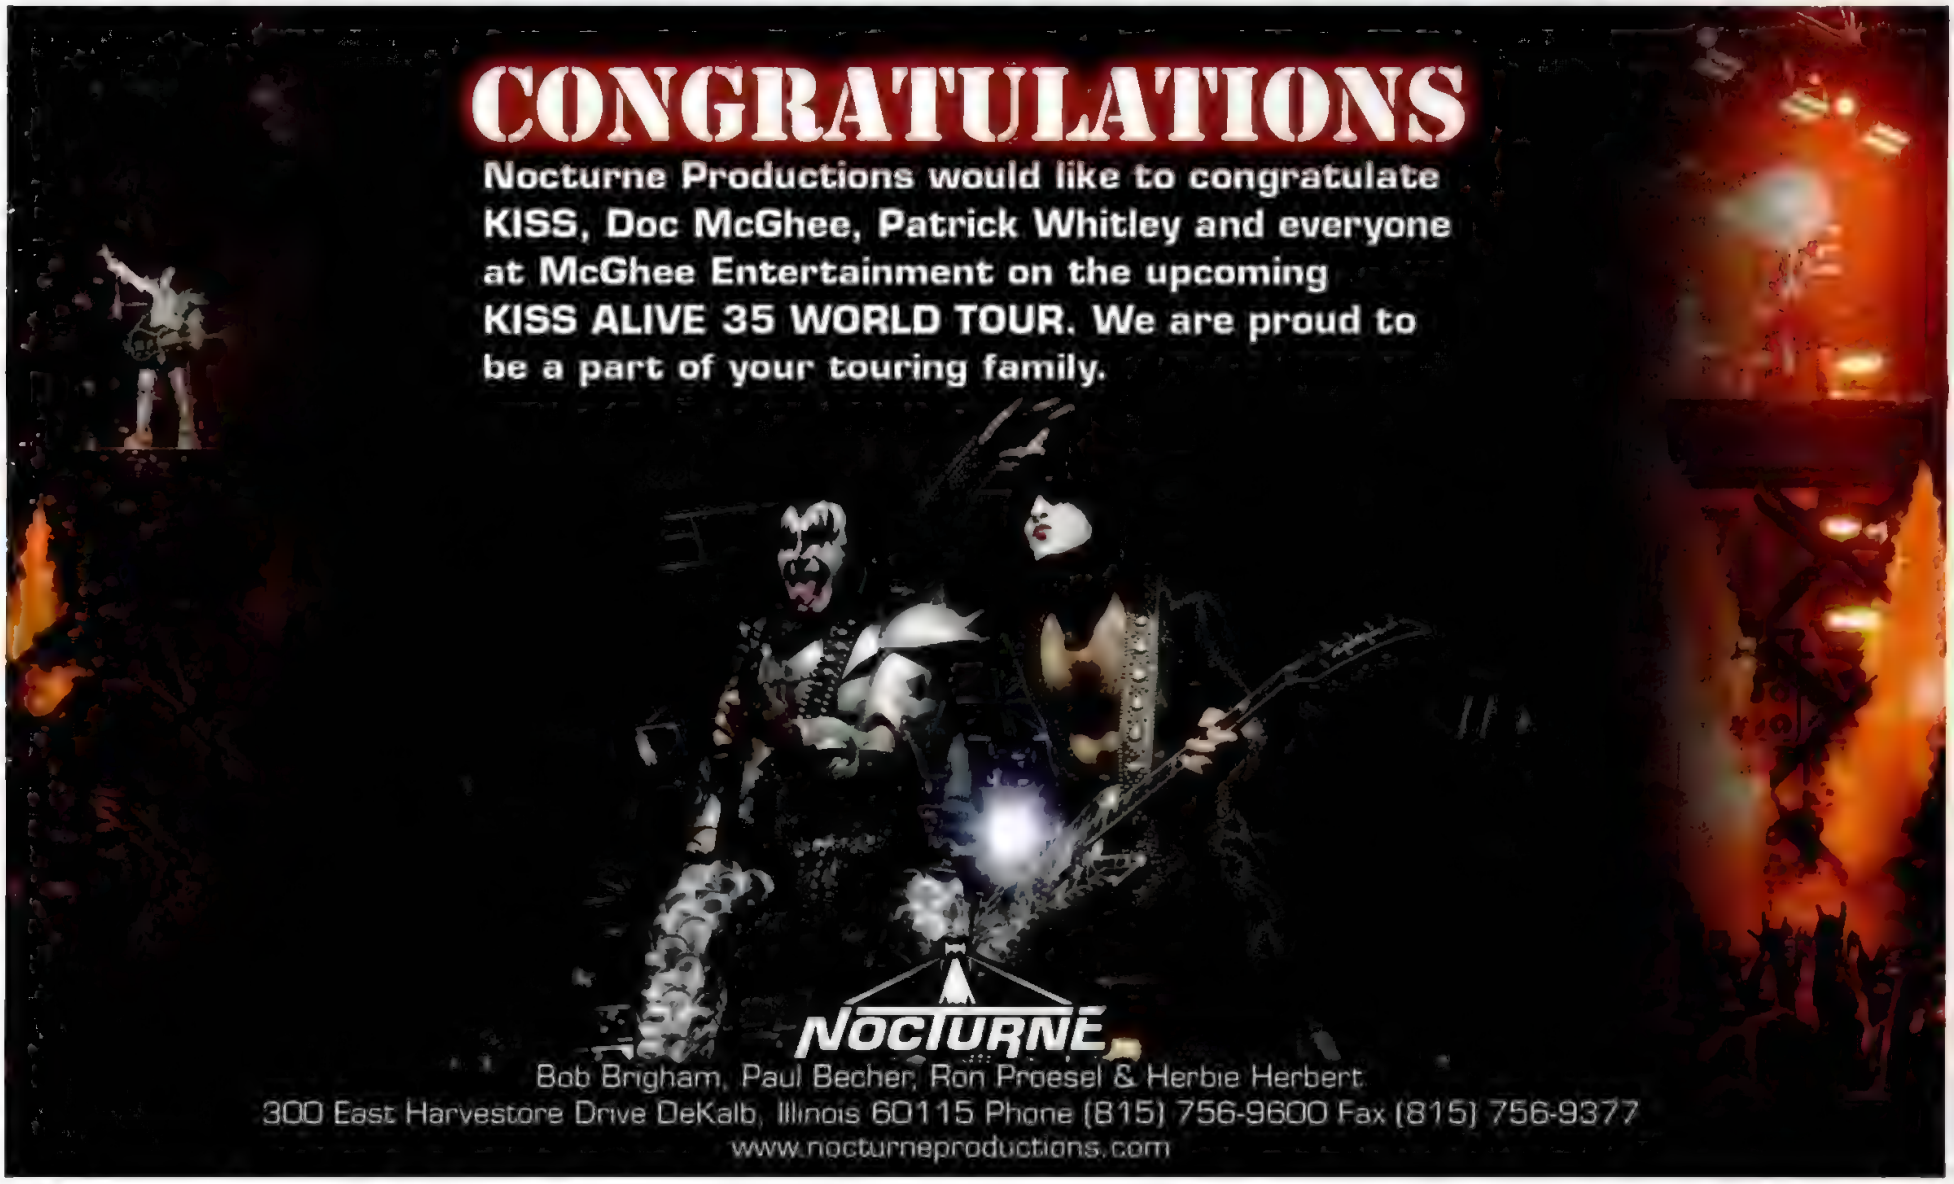
Mitch Rose at Creative Artists Agency has been Kiss' agent for 22 years and was a fan before then.

"They have an incredible fan base that has remained loyal over the course of their career," Rose says. "And they've grown their fan base, because 'Rock and Roll All Nite,' one of the greatest rock'n'roll songs ever written, is being discovered by 12- to 14-year-olds, and the parents want to share that concert experience."

Ah, the experience. In his 1978 song "Mañana," Jimmy Buffett memorably sings, "Don't try to describe a Kiss concert if you've never seen it," and today the band's live shows still defy description.

"It's a spectacle, it's a theatrical show, an amazing experience," says Rose. "There are explosions, there's fire. No one goes home from a Kiss show saying they weren't entertained."



McGhee says, "Kids are going on the Internet and seeing this band onstage, and they don't look like their grandfather onstage. They're Kiss."

Kiss gave a nod to the digital age by working with the live-music social network Eventful in routing the Kiss Alive/35 tour. "Eventful's Demand It! competition enabled Kiss to create anticipation among fans for the upcoming tour and get critical data regarding which markets have demand for shows," Eventful CEO Jordan Glazier says. "Perhaps most important, Eventful helped Kiss identify hundreds of thousands of people who self-identified themselves as future ticket buyers, and now we're successfully marketing tickets to the demanders."

And if Kiss crowds are starting to skew younger—and fan photos from Simmons show they very much are—the faithful are still around.

"The audience is young, but also there are still plenty of the older true fans that still come out," McGhee says. "It's 6-60."

GENE SIMMONS TALKS ABOUT HIS BAND, HIS BRAND, HIS FANS AND A WHOLE LOT MORE

It would be hard to come up with a more prominent rock'n'roll bassist than Gene Simmons of Kiss. ■ The Kiss co-founder, reality TV star and entrepreneur has his fingerprints on virtually all segments of the music industry. ■ Born Chaim Witz in 1949 in Haifa, Israel, and the only child of a Holocaust survivor, Simmons ignited the Kiss explosion in 1972. The band remains a touring, licensing and merchandising powerhouse, and it launches the U.S. leg of the Kiss Alive/35 tour Sept. 25 in Detroit. The group will release "Sonic Boom," its first album of new material in 11 years, Oct. 6 exclusively through Wal-Mart and Sam's Club. ■ Of course, Simmons aggressively pursues other business interests outside of the band. His Simmons Abramson Marketing is the worldwide marketing/branding entity for the IndyCar Series, and he and co-CEO Rich Abramson's NGTV.com (No Good TV) is a YouTube sensation. His other businesses include a line of T-shirts and accessories called Gene Simmons Moneybag, the Simmons Comic Group, Simmons Records and his publishing imprint Simmons Books, which published his best sellers "Sex Money Kiss" and "Ladies of the Night." ■ As was demonstrated last year in his keynote at Billboard's Touring Conference, when Simmons deigns to impart his worldview it's a wild ride, and his Billboard Q&A is definitely no exception. Spiced with a series of nearly unprintable (but admittedly funny) jokes, Simmons offers his unique take on merchandising, branding, professionalism and owning our children.

What is the biggest myth about Kiss?

That there's some grand master plan. That we're brilliant beyond belief, that we're masters of merchandise and all that stuff. That's giving us a lot more credit than we deserve.

It's a simple idea. When you love something, and people use the word "passion," you tend to look at every rug and pick it up and see what's under it.

For argument's sake, if you're a stamp collector worth your salt, you'll know every minutia about it, you'll spend all the free time you have, above and beyond your job, because you love it. And you'll know every obscure stamp, which date it came from, what condition it's in, what's the marketplace. You'll know about it because you care about it. So everything begins with a tug of the heart.

People see this cold business savvy and it starts the other way around. It starts with, "Wow, I'm in Kiss"; congratulations on 35 years of

KISS®-tory making rock

from your friends at CAA

from >>p34 everything else is the what-if, could-it-be, what could it be? You start with a dream without limitations. It's only when we wake up that we say, "It's not going to happen, it probably won't." Never listen to people, and believe in your own dreams.

My point of view is "Earth," that's not such a cool name for the planet. "Planet Kiss," now you've got something. If every inch of ground is Kiss ground, and the air you breath is Kiss air and the food you eat is Kiss food, then we've got something. Brand everything. And you should pay us for every step along the way.

Was there any sort of creative objective when you started?

Well, before Kiss there was no template. There was Disney off on the left-hand side, with their cartoons and lifestyle branding. If you were a little kid, your life was filled with Disney, you covered yourself in Disney clothing and wrapped yourself in Disney sheets, and the Disney movies had some kind of Good Housekeeping seal of approval.

And over on the right side you have the world of rockers, which is inhabited by morons. There but for the grace of God we'd all be asking the next door neighbor, "Would you like some fries with that?"

We never went to school, we never learned to read or write music. We still can't, none of us. [Paul] McCartney to this day cannot write a single shred of music. Nor can [Mick] Jagger or [Jimi] Hendrix if he were alive, and so on. We all do what we do by the seat of our pants, except some of ours are made out of leather and are tighter.

Musically was there an objective for Kiss?

The template was the Beatles. Kiss always fashioned themselves as the Beatles on steroids, with lots more makeup and higher shoes. The idea was everybody sang, everybody was a star, instead of the Stones kind of model or the Temptations or those kinds of bands where there's one singer and everybody else is in the background.

The thing that I loved about the Beatles is they all looked like they came from the same Beatle mother. It was like the perfect band in terms of look, merchandisable, eternal. Except they never trademarked their haircuts or anything much about their faces. Kiss was the first band of any kind to ever trademark their faces. It's in the Library of Congress. Which is why 35 years later there are literally thousands and thousands of things with our faces on them, anything from Kiss M&Ms to Kiss Mr. Potato Heads and Kiss Visa cards. We have Kiss Kondoms and Kiss Kaskets. We'll get you coming, we'll get you going.

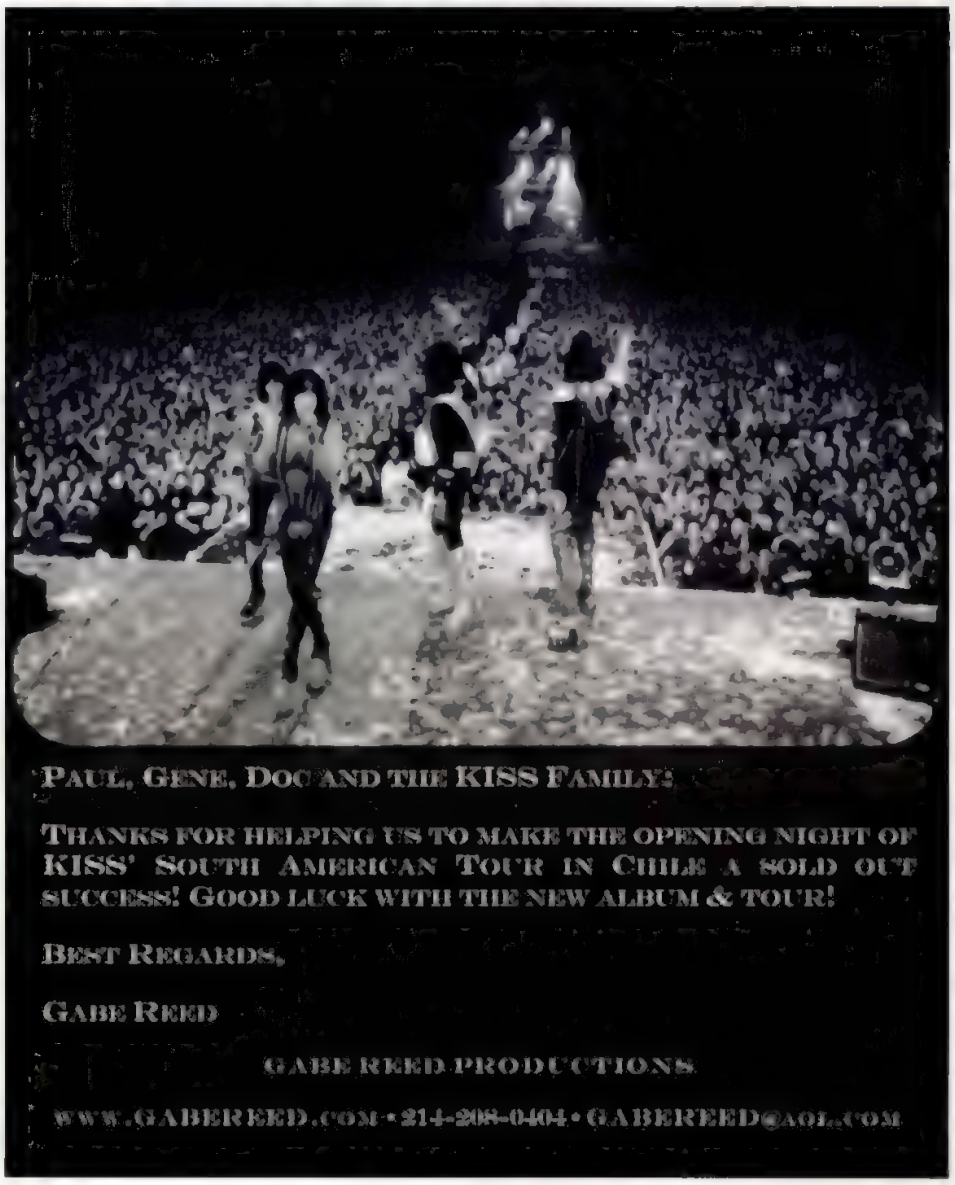
Why aren't we talking today about merchandise from Wicked Lester, the band that first brought together Kiss' original members?

Because Wicked Lester never had the legs, it just didn't have the right spin. Wicked Lester was kind of like the United Nations—you had one of everything in it. You had a Norwegian, an Italian, two Jews and a partridge in a pear tree. It was a Doobie Brothers kind of band, where if you take a look at it there's one of everything, but you can't quite put your finger on what it is.

The perfect bands for me were bands that had a sound you could instantly recognize, and you could not take a member of the band and put them in another band.

I love U2 and the Stones, but I could take the Edge and stick him in the Kings of Leon and nobody would know. You could take Charlie Watts and stick him in Dave Matthews Band and nobody would know. There's a kind of facelessness to most bands.



We wanted an audiovisual band, because as kids we went to see all of our favorite bands because we loved the music. And then we went to see them live and they turned their backs on us and stared at their shoes. It was such a big visual disappointment.

So the idea with Kiss was, "Let's put together the band we never saw onstage." Because there was plenty of good music. Every band was making good music. There was lots of great music going on and there still is. And with most of these bands there's either one guy you care about or they're just boring.

So the visual elements, including the big productions and the makeup, were always part of the presentation?

Everything. A concerted effort was made to explode like a cluster bomb, not just one explosion but every piece of the explosion explodes again. In point of fact, continued on >>p38 from >>p36 we promoted our own shows, we paid for it, we advertised ourselves, put up our own posters, before anybody did. We had a logo and trademarked it before anybody knew what that was.

When we played the Diplomat Hotel [in New York on July 13, 1973] and took over the ballroom, we were second on the bill and we rented out the whole place, paid the headliners the Brats and some other local bands to play. But when we invited people, we just positioned ourselves as "Kiss, 9:30, Masters of Metal," before there was such a thing as "heavy metal."

I used the offices of the Puerto Rican Inter-Agency Council, where I was the assistant to the director, and after they left I mailed out a photo and a one-pager and an invitation for everybody in the music business to come down and see us—managers, agents, producers—at the Diplomat Hotel, and they did.

Windfall Records, Mountain's label, came down, a few other people, and this guy named Bill Aucoin, who became our manager. When they got there the entire front row was filled with girls wearing black T-shirts with "Kiss" in glitter. [Co-founder/guitarist] Paul [Stanley] and [drummer] Peter [Criss] had stayed up all night the night before and literally glued the shirts and hand-poured glitter on them, and gave the T-shirts out to girls and put them in the front row.

You only get the respect you demand. We created our own buzz. So when people came to see us at the Diplomat Hotel, they saw the place was completely sold out—although they weren't there to see us, they were there to see the headliner—but the people we invited didn't know who was the headliner. They came there to see the 9:30 show; the headliner went on at 11.

So they saw us and the entire front row was Kiss girls; it was our show. It cost $5 to get in, you saw three bands, we had about 350 people there, it cost $1,000 to rent the place. We probably made two grand.

It seems very early on you placed a lot of importance on touring hard.

There was no choice, because we weren't the Starland Vocal Band. We didn't do singles. We wrote songs like "Strutter" and "Deuce" and "Black Diamond," and that wasn't a radio staple. "Torn Between Two Lovers" was not Kiss.

But your first album recorded on the road, "Alive!" in 1975, got you a lot of traction.

The history is pretty well-known. The whole live record thing was started by Kiss. Before Kiss, nobody did live records as a career choice. Then after "Alive!" came "Frampton Comes Alive"; everybody used the "alive" thing, they even used our engineer. And they all did double-albums because we were out of our minds.

The first three records kind of floated, though we were huge live. By the third record we were playing Anaheim [Calif.] Stadium and Atlanta Braves Stadium, but we still hadn't sold records because we didn't have singles. This was 1976, and by '77-'79 we were the No. 1 Gallup Poll group in all of North America. No. 2 was the Beatles, No. 3 was the Bee Gees or Led Zeppelin, depending on which year you're talking about.

"Kiss mania" is not even a description of it. We owned your children. We owned them. They looked like us, they painted their faces like us, they walked like us, they knew our songs, and they tattooed their bodies. And eventually they had children and they named them after our songs.

Game point: Dozens of dancers, dressed like the members of Kiss, performed during the pregame show for Super Bowl XXXIII at Miami's Pro Player Stadium in 1999.

When did it start to become the Kiss Army?

That started in 1975 in Terre Haute, Ind. A guy named Ray Sharkey, I think, was a fan who wanted his local radio station to play Kiss in Terre Haute, but they wouldn't do it because it wasn't the Bee Gees or Pablo Cruz. And he threatened them; he said, "Me and my friends, we call ourselves the Kiss Army. We're going to come down there and surround the station," so the radio station gets nervous and calls the cops.

The radio station refuses to play Kiss, the newspapers send over a photographer, the next day a big photo of thousands of fans surrounding this little station, which looks like an outhouse in the middle of a cornfield outside of Terre Haute. [The] headline [was] "Kiss Army Invades Terre Haute," something like that, and there and then the Kiss Army was born.

Did you trademark it?

Immediately. And 35 years later, the Kiss Army still exists, but it's cer- continued on >>p40 from >>p38 tainly a volunteer army. Everybody proudly belongs and marches. Jagger or [Jimmy] Page or anybody out there would give their left nut to have Kiss fans. Are you kidding me? What are you going to do, tattoo Michael Jackson on your ass?

Hot licks: "We will never take it for granted, ever, not one single show," says GENE SIMMONS (left) onstage at Sydney's Acer Arena during the Kiss Alive/35 tour with PAUL STANLEY (center) and TOMMY THAYER.

The army has been amazingly loyal to Kiss, even through lineup changes.

We had to [make lineup changes]. We had to, because there's an ethical and moral commitment that we made to ourselves and our fans: We treat the stage as holy ground. This is electric church. And when we get on that stage, our call to arms starts off with "you," our fans, not "our" or "we." "You wanted the best, you got the best, the hottest band in the world, Kiss!" We say our name last, you come first. And the vow we made to ourselves was, "Dear God, if you ever give us the chance, we will never take it for granted, ever, not one single show, at any time. And if any one of us doesn't deserve to be out there, we will kick his ass off that stage." And if you use drugs or alcohol in Kiss, you're out. If you can't respect yourself and your body, how the hell can you respect the band, and especially the fans who put you there in the first place?

[Guitarist] Ace [Frehley] and Peter, in the beginning, belonged in the band, and later on they did not. They belonged home so they can save their lives and try to turn their lives around, not onstage. This is not a babysitting service, this is the Olympics and if anybody catches anything in your bloodstream, you should be thrown out on your ass. Your medals should be stripped, you're gone. And [current drummer] Eric Singer and [guitarist] Tommy Thayer are professional, they love it.

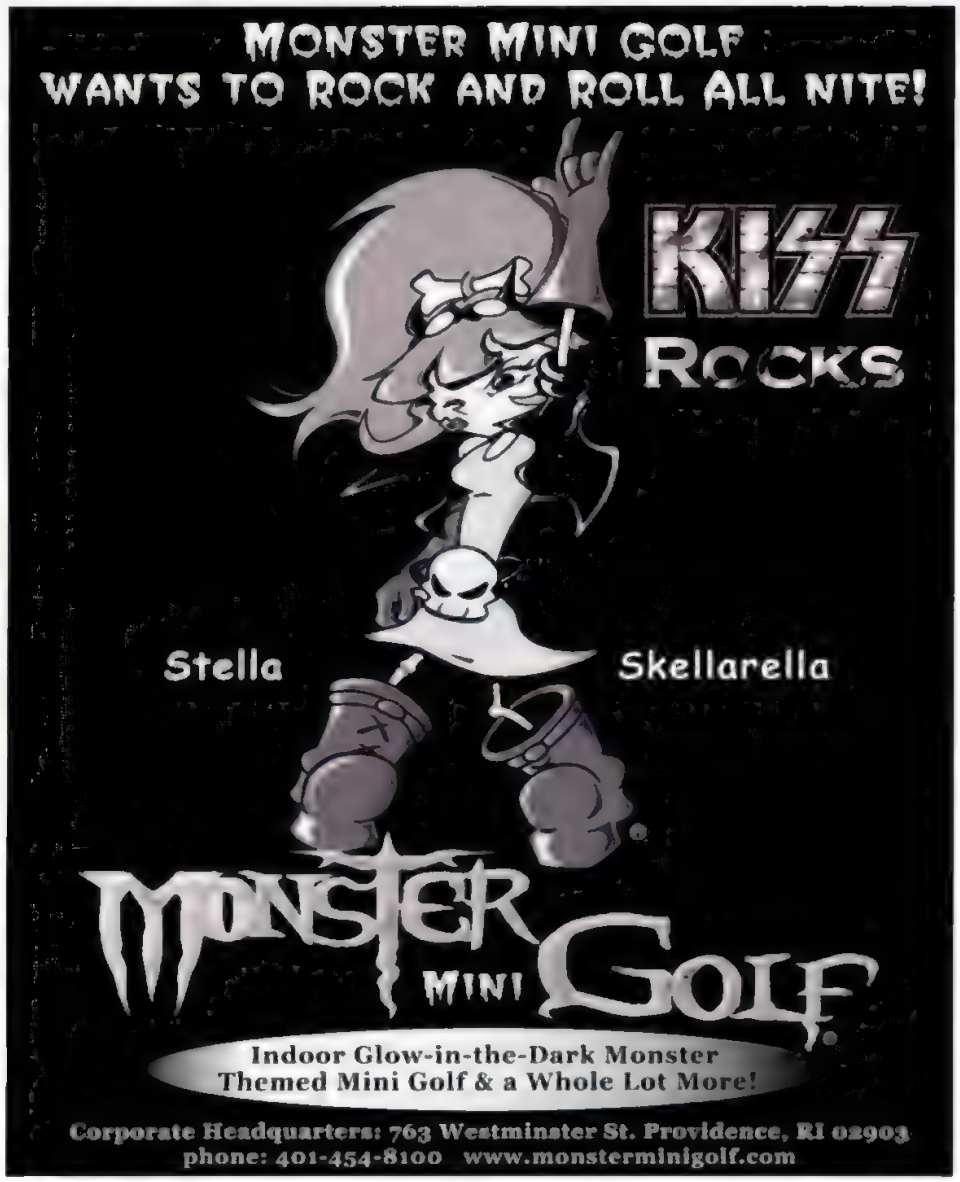
What did you like about the exclusive Wal-Mart deal with your new "Sonic Boom" album, and why did the band decide to go that way?

The world's a different place. I'm not a fan of downloading for free. I don't believe in anything for free. The kids next door that we think are sweet and have freckled faces were never punished for stealing everything. You can literally point to a million people out of work—the truckers that truck the records to the stores, the stores themselves that used to hire people, the gasoline they used, the warehouses—an entire industry is wiped out because some college kid didn't want to pay for songs. And who's to blame? The record industry, for never having a repercussion.

If you try to break into my house, I'll shoot your head off. Are you out of your fucking mind? But fans were allowed to break into stuff that people created and simply take it without paying for it, and that is nobody's fault but the record industry. It was lax.

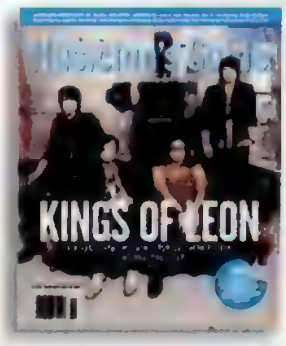
Wal-Mart is a real company. We met the Walton people—they're fine upstanding people, we're big fans of them, and they give millions of people jobs and we're all for it. And they're willing to charge for the product. Last time I checked, Kiss is not a charity. I will let you know when I want to give my stuff away for free. I don't want you to determine that.

Does it bother you when people say you're just in this for the money?



Anybody who simply wants to do it for free should give me any dollar they don't want. They're all full of shit. Everybody lies, but we don't. Of course we want to get paid for what we do, but there's also a tug of the heart, of pride. We created this thing—this ain't the Monkees, baby. We're the mother and we gave birth to Kiss and I'll be damned if anybody's going to tell me what it is, how it walks and how it talks. And do I want to get paid for that? You bet your ass I do.

But you still have fun when you get onstage, right?



Beyond that. Of course. It's a thrill, an honor and a privilege, but who says you have to enjoy it? That's not a prerequisite. How about treating it like craftsmanship? Whatever you can do, do it well. Most of the people on planet Earth, if they're lucky enough to have a job, they go to a job they probably hate. They go to work and all they want is to get paid at the end of the week. We consider that the salt of the earth. Why is that any less valid than what I do? Forget the thrill of it, you like getting paid. And the better job you do, the more money you make. Even God passes the fucking hat around.

You made a memorable point at Billboard's Touring Conference last year about professionalism and being on time for shows.

Pride. It's self-respect. For fuck's sake, just do it for yourself. Say what you mean, mean what you say. Shit out the Axl Rose disease in your system, get rid of that. Excuses are for the next guy that winds up in jail and becomes very popular there, becomes somebody's girlfriend.

Do you care what critics say?

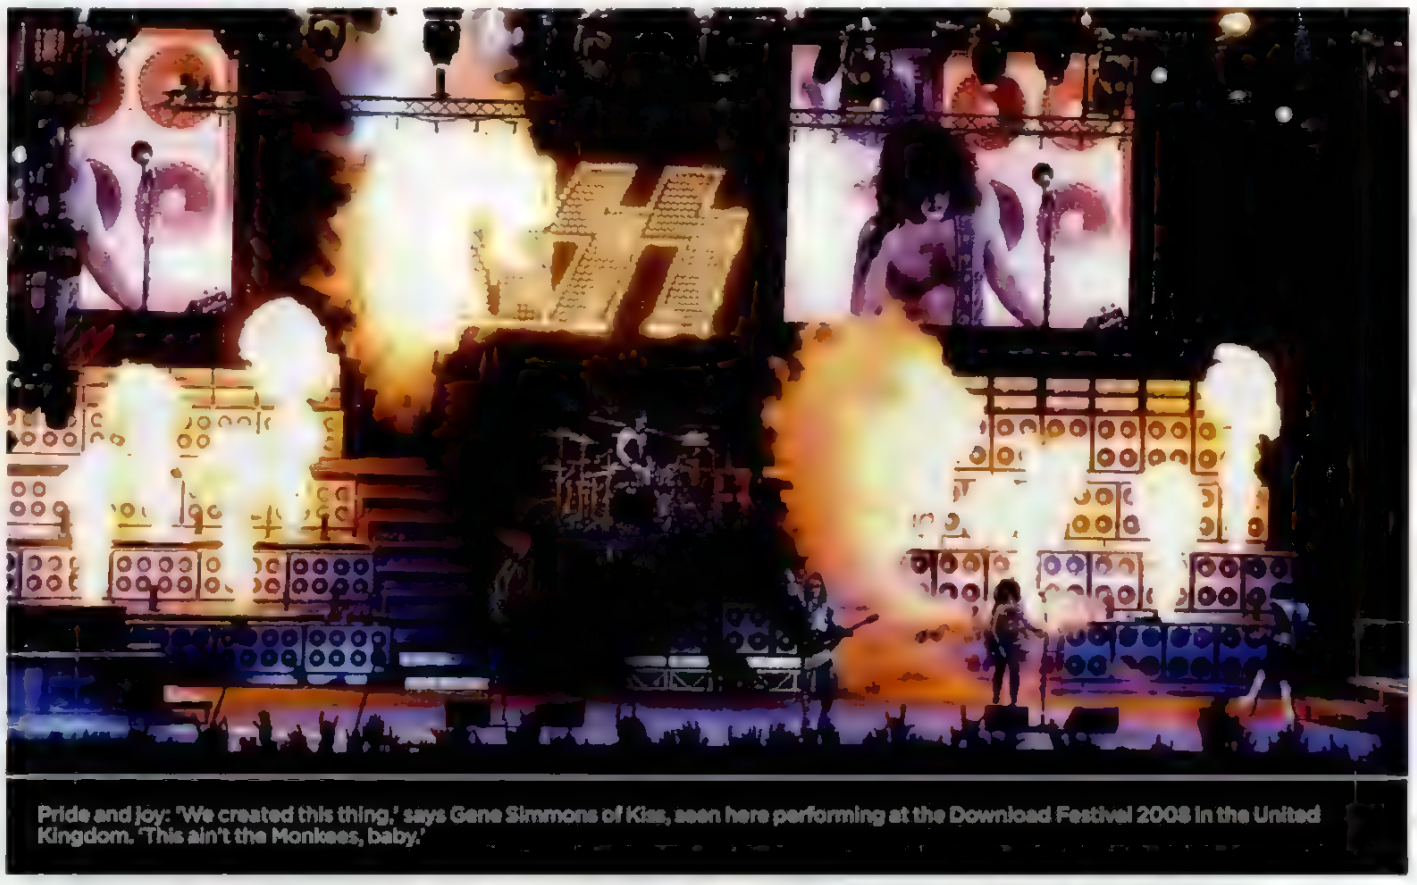
Of course. But that will still never get them laid. They were ugly bastards before who never got laid, and no matter what, they still look like Bob Lefsetz. They shine my shoes. I bury them in my backyard. You guys are just jealous that we get seas of pussy and you get nothing. I go to see movies or a band when somebody that I know says, "I just saw this." I trust his word. Not somebody who gets free tickets who's a failed human being.

When it comes to building a career, what do a lot of bands get wrong?

They don't listen to Gene Simmons. When you're dishonest with yourself and your fans and sugarcoat everything you say, you're full of shit—you can smell that a mile a way. Be who you are.

It's difficult for me to accept someone who's worth $100 million—and I am—who gets up and starts talking about rain forests and whales and acid rain. Shut the fuck up. Play your songs, and if I want information, I'll go to people who are qualified to talk about it. I don't want rock stars talking about the environment in the same way I don't want environmentalists talking about rock.

What's your take on the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame?



I think it was a good idea, but it's clearly political. It's Boss Tweed, it's the old New York rotten system, where you get 10 guys in the back room who decide who's going to be in the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. I want nothing to do with that. It's a sham and those guys mean nothing. You should take a look at the photo of the guys that vote on it. Fucking scary.

What would you still like to accomplish with Kiss?

There's nothing we can't do. We're developing a Kiss animated show, like a superhero, X-Men kind of show. We have a Las Vegas Kiss show that's being planned. I just came back from Singapore. There's nowhere we can't go and nothing we can't do.

This is the weird thing. There's something going on here that even we and I don't pretend to understand. All I know is we are not going to take it for granted. We take it deadly seriously. And we intend to live up to our own legend. We intend not to let the fans down, the fans that have been there for 35 years and are probably in their 50s, some in their 60s, and the new 15-year-old fan who's heard about the legend of Kiss.

So many things in life are not real. Santa is not real. Superman is not real. Kiss is real. And we're going to make sure that when you leave that show, your first Kiss show or the 100th, you'll walk away, whether you love the band or not, and say, "That is the best fucking thing I've ever seen on planet Earth." That's a vow we make to ourselves and anybody who's willing to come out there and see us. ••••

Pride and joy: 'We created this thing,' says Gene Simmons of Kiss, seen here performing at the Download Festival 2008 in the United Kingdom. 'This ain't the Monkees, baby.'

The 10th Annual Latin Grammy Awards Return To Las Vegas

By Ayala Ben-Yehuda

With "crisis" the word on everyone's lips these days, what better way for Latin music's finest to escape than by going to Las Vegas? ★ That's at least partly the thinking behind the selection of the city's Mandalay Bay Events Center as the site of the 10th annual Latin Grammy Awards Nov. 5. ★ The city, which has become a magnet for Latin performers and is synonymous with an overall good time, is also a proven ratings draw. The 2007 broadcast of the event from Las Vegas on Univision, which incorporated signature Vegas shows into the musical performances of the nominees, won industry acclaim. It also scored huge ratings: 12 million viewers, according to Nielsen Media Research, a sister company of Billboard.

"We were very happy with the feel of the show in '07," says Otto Padrón, senior VP of programming and promotions at the Univision Network.

But when the show broadcasts live at 8 p.m. ET Nov. 5, don't expect a rerun from two years ago. "We know that Vegas brings so many ideas to the table," Padrón says. "One of the things we like so much about Las Vegas is that it's a growing Hispanic market that we need to reach out to."

In a recessionary time, the Latin Recording Academy was also looking for a place that would be "attractive and affordable to everyone," academy president Gabriel Abaroa says, citing the city's wide range of hotel and dining options in close proximity, from low-cost to luxurious.

"We already have experience [presenting the show] in Las Vegas. Are we prepared under the current financial constraints to go to a new city? I don't think so."

The location was just about the only thing nailed down at press time, with the performance plans to be largely solidified following the nominations announcement Sept. 17.

But going into the 10th installment of the awards show, Abaroa says viewers will be reminded of the impact that the Latin Grammys have made in their first decade. That celebration will continue into next year, Abaroa says, with ideas in the works for commemorative items that could include books and DVDs.

For now, the Latin Recording Academy and Univision will use the powerful tools at their disposal to get the word out about Latin Grammy night.

That includes related coverage on Univision's other media properties, including Galavision and Telefutura, as well as Univision.com. Video interviews and behind-the-scenes footage began appearing following the nominations announcement and will include coverage of the Person of the Year gala honoring Juan Gabriel as well as arrivals footage during the preshow.

Univision.com's mobile site will feature Latin Grammy updates, photos and videoclips highlighting past awards shows.

Univision.com boasted big gains from its Latin Grammy coverage in November 2008, with the site's music vertical scoring more than 71 million page views that month—a 28% increase over November 2007. The day of the Latin Grammys, the awards' microsite on Univision.com increased more than 100% from the year prior.

Increasingly, in recent years, another strategy to get viewers excited about the event is the Latin Grammy street parties, put on by Miami-based Eventus Marketing. The parties are hitting six cities this year, including Las Vegas, up from five in 2008.

Since they began in South Florida in 2003, the parties have attracted top acts to perform the free shows because of the heavy attendance and media exposure that goes with them.

In addition to the street parties, the Latin Recording Academy is presenting a series of singer/songwriter showcases at Los Angeles' Grammy Museum leading up to the awards. The series began with Colombia's Marta Gómez. Abaroa says the inspiration for the series came from an unusually high number of entries in the singer/songwriter category this year (though the showcase participants aren't among the nominees).

Singer/songwriters Kany García and Jesse & Joy have been the last two best new artist winners at the Latin Grammys; those wins proved to be important turning points in the acts' careers, says Yamile Fernández, WestWood Entertainment/Day 1 director for North America. The company manages García and the brother-sister duo Jesse & Joy.

García's win led to sponsorships with Dove soap and Ford, Fernández says.

For Jesse & Joy, "it opened a lot of doors that normally wouldn't have opened so quickly," Fernández adds. A performance on the show, seen in countries around the world, "puts you in the living room of millions of people and gets you to brands and people in the industry . . . when you go to different countries, that can always be used to your advantage."

It isn't always a given that the Latin Grammys will have a significant impact on the sales of performers and winners. Last year only one artist, multiple-award winner/performer Juanes, saw a boost in album sales of more than 1,000 copies during the week after the awards, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

A Latin Grammy performance timed to a major album release, as Ricky Martin has had in the past, can lead to a strong release week. But since many of this year's nominees have little name recognition in the United States, the impact is likely to be small in terms of total albums sold, but higher as a relative percentage gain.

Abaroa observes that in a world of niches, it helps to have a universally recognized mark of excellence.

"In the past, multinational companies and big independents were able to suddenly create international superstars," Abaroa says. With that task becoming more challenging, "a Latin Grammy really helps you." ••••

On The Rise

Nominees For Best New Artist Span Regions And Styles

By Ayala Ben-Yehuda

This year's best new artist nominees are a wildly varied group, musically and geographically. They include independent and major-label artists based in Spain, Mexico, Colombia and the United States and represent everything from straight-up pop to flamenco fusion.

[redacted]

The son of pop star Emmanuel, the pianist/songwriter was introduced to audiences when he performed on his father's Retro En Vivo tour. He subsequently scored a platinum album in Mexico with his Warner debut, "Voy." Produced by Loris Ceroni with a combination of ballads, pop rock and light funk, Acha's accessible, pleasantly retro-in-some-places sound is complemented by smartly employed strings, his unsappy yet tender delivery and his golden-boy good looks. The single "Te Amo" went to No. 10 on Billboard's Hot Latin Songs chart. In a move usually reserved for veteran stars, "Te Amo" was used as a telenovela theme in Argentina.

[redacted]

The Afro-Colombian trio won critical acclaim and festival awards for its enticing fusion of hip-hop, dub, electronica, funk and rhythms from Colombia's Pacific coast. Its debut album, "Somos Pacifico," is peppered with marimbas, tambora, congas and traditional vocal stylings combined with modern rapping. It was produced by Ivan Benavides, known for his fresh take on traditional Colombian music. The U.S.-based indie label Nacional Records will release a compilation of tracks from the group's two albums.

Luz Rios

After more than a decade of playing local gigs, radio festivals and county fairs, Mexico-born, Southern California-based pop artist Luz Rios self-released her album "Aire" and had two radio singles in the United States. One was the title track, a country-style duet with legendary regional Mexican artist Joan Sebastian, and the other, "No Me Da La Gana," a pop song. The singer/songwriter, managed by former Balboa Records national promotions director Frank White, opened for Balboa artist Sebastian on tour, giving her even more visibility.

Claudio Corsi

Quirky, folky acoustic pop artist Claudio Corsi hails from Venezuela but is based in Miami, where he recorded his album "Aire Y Mar" on the indie Cacao Music. The label is co-owned by Anaheim Angels baseball player Bobby Abreu. Corsi has been a singer, arranger or producer on more than 20 albums, and his songs have been recorded by the likes of Ismael Miranda. Counting everyone from Joan Manuel Serrat to Iron Maiden as influences, Corsi's music incorporates sharp observation and literate humor with a mellow, bluesy feel. His music was featured in the Venezuelan feature film "A Mi Me Gusta."

India Martinez

Spain's India Martinez performed at flamenco festivals all over the world before releasing "Despertar" on Warner. The album is a fusion of Martinez's husky flamenco vocals with big world-music sounds, from sweeping Middle Eastern strings to jazz and ballads. Part of Spain's new flamenco movement, Martinez has shared the stage with other popular artists in the genre, such as Chambao and Pitingo.

Producer Of The Year Nominations Echo Past Nods

By Leila Cobo

★ No Latin Grammy Award category is as consistent as producer of the year. Here, the same names reappear again and again. This year, three of the five nominees have been previous winners or nominees. ★

Aureo Baqueiro

Mexico's Aureo Baqueiro won Billboard's producer of the year award last April at the Billboard Latin Music Awards. He brings to the table great versatility and the ability to produce straight-ahead pop as well as tracks infused with more traditional Mexican elements. Baqueiro is up for tracks produced for Beto Cuevas' solo project (Cuevas is the former lead signer of the Chilean rock group La Ley), Brazilian duo Victor & Leo, Spaniard Chenoa and Mexican artists Yahir and Aleks Syntek.

Sergio George

Sergio George won last year's producer of the year Latin Grammy Award. This time around, he has a single production under his belt, Luis Enrique's "Ciclos." But that album has made great waves because it's marked Enrique's comeback as well as the launch of George's own label, Sop Spot Music.

Julio 'Chaboli' Jiménez Borja

Julio Jiménez Borja, aka "Chaboli," is married to Spanish neo-flamenco chanteuse Niña Pastori and also produces her emblematic albums. A percussionist, Chaboli is the son of Juan Antonio Jiménez Muñoz, the late founding member of the popular Spanish trio Los Chichos. Chaboli is up for this year's award on the strength of Pastori's "Esperando Verte," which is nominated for best flamenco album.

Cachorro Lopez

Argentine Cachorro Lopez has won this category in the past, thanks to his command of pop fusion and his ability to work with different acts. It's ironic that on this occasion, many of the tracks considered are from Paulina Rubio's album "Gran City Pop," which didn't garner any nominations despite its eminent appeal. Lopez is also up for songs produced for the Argentine pop group Miranda, introspective Spanish singer Alex Ubago, Argentine rockers Los Pericos and party band Los Amigos Invisibles, among others.

José Lugo

Puerto Rican arranger/producer/pianist José Lugo is a respected salsa bandleader who's worked with a variety of big names, from Gilberto Santa Rosa to Elvis Crespo. He gets this nod for two albums: "Así Soy," by Cuban singer Isaac Delgado, and "Guasábara," from his own José Lugo Orchestra, featuring many of the singers he's produced and arranged through the years, including Santa Rosa.

Name That Tune

Song Of The Year Nods Include Hits, Lesser-Known Gems

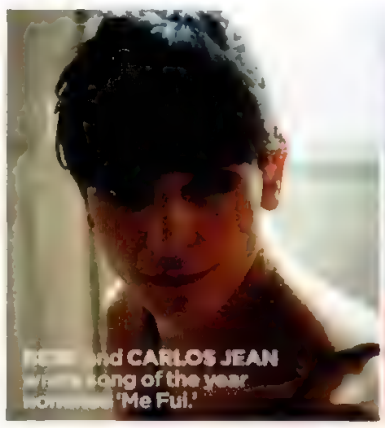
By Leila Cobo

'Aqui Estoy Yo'

Songwriters: Claudia Brant, Luis Fonsi, G. Reuben
Artist: Luis Fonsi with Aleks Syntek, Noel Schajris and David Bisbal
Album: "Palabras Del Silencio" (Universal Music Latino)

The second single off Luis Fonsi's breakthrough pop album, "Palabras Del Silencio," is a midtempo ballad in 6/8 time performed as a quartet with Aleks Syntek, Noel Schajris and David Bisbal. The vocal quartet format is a departure for the artist, and the track spent two weeks at No. 1 on Billboard's Hot Latin Songs chart and 19 weeks in the top 10. Fonsi, who regularly writes with friend Claudia Brant, says he conceived the song years ago but never recorded it. "One day I said, 'Why don't I invite three guys, three friends I can get in touch with easily,' " and pitched the notion to Bisbal during a fishing trip. "This would have never happened if we all weren't very good friends," Fonsi says.

'Día Tras Día'



Songwriters: Yoel Henríquez, Jorge Luis Piloto
Artist: Andrés Cepeda
Album: "Día Tras Día" (FM Discos & Cintas)

The versatile Jorge Luis Piloto garners two nods in the songwriter category, the first with this track co-written with Puerto Rico's Yoel Henríquez for Colombian Andrés Cepeda. The artist, who was working with Piloto on other songs, liked this one in particular because it was reminiscent of his days with the rock/pop band Poligamia. The song hit No. 1 on the Colombian chart and the video features members of Poligamia, with whom Cepeda last recorded in 1997. Cepeda had previously worked with Piloto on the album "Para Amarte Mejor." As a songwriting team, Piloto and Henríquez garnered a Latin Grammy nomination in 2007.

'Me Fui'

Songwriters: Bebe, Carlos Jean
Artist: Bebe
Album: "Y." (EMI Music Spain)

The Spanish singer Bebe came out with a bang in 2004 with her album "Pa' Fuera Telarañas," which received five Latin Grammy nominations. Following that, Bebe literally disappeared from sight. The artist's new album, "Y."—which translates to "and, period"—was produced by Carlos Jean, who also worked on Bebe's debut set. "Me Fui," the first single, peaked at No. 49 on Billboard's Hot Latin Songs chart and No. 26 on Latin Pop Airplay.

'Verte Sonreir'

Songwriter: Alejandro Lerner
Artist: Alejandro Lerner
Album: "Enojado" (El Pie Records)

Argentine singer/songwriter Alejandro Lerner now records as an indie artist after many years working with majors. Lerner, who composes on the piano, wrote this evocative tune after waking up one morning and watching his wife, Marcela, asleep beside him. "Verte Sonreir" is an homage to her and an acknowledgement of her support and love through the years. "Verte Sonreir" is the first single off the album "Enojado," which has been released in Argentina, Mexico, Colombia, Chile, Uruguay, Paraguay and Ecuador.

'Yo No Sé Mañana'

Songwriters: Jorge Luis Piloto, Jorge Villamizar Artist: Luis Enrique
Album: "Ciclos" (Top Stop Music)

Nicaraguan singer/songwriter Luis Enrique became a salsa star in the '90s with his brand of romantic salsa. But he has evolved, deciding to go pop, then delving into world music. His sales petered out and his last foray onto Billboard's charts was in 2002. Last year, Enrique signed with an indie label, producer Sergio George's Top Spot Music, and went back to salsa. His return was one of the big success stories of the year, with the single "Yo No Sé Mañana" reaching No. 1 on Billboard's Tropical Airplay chart and No. 6 on Hot Latin Songs. Enrique turned to the writing skills of Jorge Luis Piloto—who has written hits for a broad range of pop and tropical singers—and Jorge Villamizar, the former lead singer of Bacilos who has penned hits for Paulina Rubio. •••• ng at the moon: WOLFMOTHER

ROCK BY LARS BRANDLE

Hungry Like The Wolf

Wolfmother Fights Back After Lineup Change

Like all animals, Wolfmother faced two choices: evolve or die.

Citing "longstanding frictions," keyboard/bassist Chris Ross and drummer Myles Heskett left in 2008. But frontman Andrew Stockdale wasn't about to give up after achieving so much—the band sold 537,000 U.S. copies of its self-titled 2006 debut, according to Nielsen SoundScan, and won a 2007 Grammy Award for best hard rock performance.

"The Beatles lasted seven years, we lasted four," Stockdale says from the band's temporary Los Angeles base. "We toured our arses off around the world. We did 300 shows. It takes a certain type of person to want to continue to live that kind of life."

Stockdale replaced his departed bandmates with drummer Dave Atkins—a veteran of Brisbane, Australia, bands Resin Dogs and Pangaea—guitarist Aidan Nemeth and Ian Peres on bass and keys.

Together they crafted the epic blues rock of "Cosmic Egg," due Oct. 23 in Australia on Modular Recordings/Universal, Oct. 26 in the United Kingdom on Island and Oct. 27 in the United States on Interscope.

Also new to the project is manager Cory Brennan, founder of New York-based 5B Artist Management, and British producer Alan Moulder. But despite all the changes, Wolfmother's trademark rock sound remains intact, with standout tracks like "In the Morning" and "California Queen" likely to more than satisfy fans of the first album.

"I can listen to the whole record without cringing, which is a good sign," Stockdale says. "I wanted to take it back to an old-school hi-fi sound."

"It's a difficult situation to come back from," Modular A&R manager Glen Goetze says of the split. "But [Stockdale has] worked his way through it. It's like starting from scratch on a debut record all over again, but we already have a sizable fan base out there."

The band has been re-engaging those fans for several months now, with a carefully plotted live return involving a mix of high-impact shows, festival dates and intimate secret gigs. The group was one of only two acts to play both of the Sound Relief bushfire benefit concerts held March 14 at Melbourne Cricket Ground and Sydney Cricket Ground. It also closed out the March 27 MTV Australia Awards, performing the appropriately titled "Back Round," a non-album track that was a free download on Wolfmother's Web site and the site for "Guitar Hero 5," which features the band.

In the United States, the group opened for the Killers on six dates in August and September and—after Australian and European shows—will start its own monthlong U.S. headline theater tour Oct. 29 at Dallas' House of Blues.

"They'll be touring a lot," Modular managing director Steve Pavlovic says. "A third of 'Wolfmother' album sales were in America, two-thirds in the rest of the world. You'd have to think there's a pretty decent market outside America. They'll spend two-thirds of their time addressing it."

Interscope reports considerable support from U.S. media, with appearances on "Late Show With David Letterman" and "The Late Late Show With Craig Ferguson" already taped and more TV spots in the pipeline, according to marketing director Dyana Kass. At radio, Kass says the lead track, "New Moon Rising," has had good early reactions since it went to modern rock, college and active rock formats Aug. 14.

The band also continues to make friends in the right places and will play to 600,000-plus Australians when it opens AC/DC's March 2010 homecoming stadium tour. The band will appear in drinks brand Absolut's upcoming global Rock Edition ad campaign, and Stockdale has collaborated on a track for Slash's next album.

"We might do a few shows or some surprise guest appearances. I'd love to have him play at some Wolfmother shows," Stockdale says.

All the signs are that Wolfmother can build on its debut success, despite the changes in personnel. But Stockdale says he's taking nothing for granted.

"At the start when people were saying, 'Wolfmother returns,' I was like, 'Don't say it's a comeback,' " he says. "But maybe a comeback is a good thing. A bit of a struggle, a challenge, is a healthy thing to have in life. Every time I do a gig now, I think, 'Wow, this is incredible.' "

>>>'NEW MOON' SOUNDTRACK REVEALED

The soundtrack to "New Moon"—the second installment in the "Twilight" film series—will feature songs by Thom Yorke, Grizzly Bear, Bon Iver, Lykke Li and the Killers, according to an official track list released Sept. 21 on "Twilight" author Stephenie Meyer's Web site. Death Cab for Cutie scored the soundtrack's lead single, "Meet Me on the Equinox." Other acts that appear in the credits include Band of Skulls, OK Go and Editors. "New Moon" hits theaters Nov. 20; the soundtrack is due Oct. 20 on Chop Shop/Atlantic Records.

>>>COHEN BACK ONSTAGE AFTER COLLAPSE

Singer Leonard Cohen returned to the stage Sept. 21 in Barcelona after he collapsed during a concert Sept. 18 in Valencia, Spain, and was rushed to the hospital. The Canadian was halfway through his song "Bird on a Wire" when he fainted. His manager later told media that the singer had suffered a bout of food poisoning but had been reluctant to cancel the show. Cohen was released from the hospital and recovered over the weekend. The artist has been on tour since May, performing in Canada, Europe, New Zealand and Australia, after coming out of retirement. After Spain, Cohen is due to perform Oct. 17 in Sunrise, Fla.

>>>LIVE NATION, BET PAIR UP FOR CONCERT SERIES

Live Nation has partnered with BET Networks to produce a series of U.S. tours that will visit Live Nation's House of Blues clubs and other venues across the country. The partnership will launch this fall with the 106 & Park tour, featuring co-headliners Trey Songz and Mario. The trek begins Sept. 29 at the House of Blues in Los Angeles and will visit major U.S. cities through November. Other acts featured on the tour include Day 26, Sean Garrett and RydazNRtist. BET will serve as the tour's exclusive media partner.

The Lips Have It

The Flaming Lips Keep On Truckin'

On fire: THE FLAMING LIPS

In the wee hours of the morning on Monday, Sept. 14, Flaming Lips frontman Wayne Coyne was signing autographs after his band performed at upstate New York's All Tomorrow's Parties festival when a burly young fan approached him with a length of an industrial strap. Coyne recognized it as one of his own, used for tying down equipment like the large cannons that shoot confetti into the crowd throughout the band's stage show. The fan told Coyne the strap had been shot out of the cannon and hit him in the chest, but he calmly handed it back, got his shirt signed and walked away.

This isolated incident symbolizes a few things about the Lips—their fans love them with a devotion that borders on insanity, the group's live shows are such spectacles that flying straps might very well be part of the festivities, and they're one of the luckier bands around.

The group started in the early '80s and has survived addiction, infighting and a holdup at a Long John Silvers seafood restaurant; had an alt-rock radio hit, "She Don't Use Jelly," in 1993; and played the Peach Pit on "Beverly Hills 90210." Critics love them, audiences adore them, and they sell albums. 2002's "Yoshimi Battles the Pink Robots" has sold 570,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan, while follow-up "At War With the Mystics" has sold 220,000.

Now the band is preparing to roll out a new album, "Embryonic," due Oct. 13 on Warner. The 18-track set was initially conceived as a double-album but will be sold in one- and two-CD packages. "We realized that as much as we wanted to do the double-album, all the songs fit on one disc," Lips manager Scott Booker says. "We wanted to keep the costs down for our younger fans, and we'll also be releasing a double-disc with added content, a fur-covered double album for collectors and a vinyl version."

Coyne describes "Embryonic" as "slightly disturbed, but pleasant," adding, "We tried to make it feel like, 'If you like two songs, you'll like the whole record' and 'If you don't like two songs, you probably won't like any of this.' " The record has echoes of acts like Can and Joy Division and sounds cooler and less whimsical than previous efforts, especially on the opener "Convinced of the Hex."

While the album might sound calmer, the live show remains frenetic, complete with dancers dressed in yeti costumes, Coyne rolling across the audience in what can only be described as a man-sized hamster ball and confetti—lots and lots of confetti. "We have the confetti shipped out to us," Coyne says. "If we were to take it all and go out for a month of shows, it would fill a truck. It's a lot of confetti."

Warner marketing director Tom Osborn says the live show is the band's calling card. "Q magazine in the U.K. said the Flaming Lips were one of the 50 bands you had to see before you die," he says. "They've had some of the core elements of the live shows in place for a while, but Wayne is constantly trying to do new things and updating the visuals. They want it to be much more of an experience than just a rock show."

For a recent string of dates, fans also had the chance to preview the new album. "We gave away three tracks from the new album digitally when people bought tickets to the last tour," Osborn says. "Then, a week before the show, fans got digital copies of three classic B-sides sent to them. Finally, they could go to a Web site after the show and download a live version of the concert they had attended. It was all built seamlessly into the ticketing so fans didn't have to do extra work."

Concert attendees could also listen to the entire album at stations set up next to the merch table. "I don't know if anyone missed the show and listened to all 18 tracks, but the idea was to give them a taste," Osborn says.

"Embryonic" was streamed live on the Web site for "The Colbert Report" to coincide with Coyne's Sept. 16 appearance on the show. "I wanted to stream the last record, too, but Warner was more cautious," Booker says. Osborn adds that at this point, "we know records leak, it's just going to happen. The Lips have a very loyal fan base and we think they'll buy the record anyway."

> 'It became a lot more fun to be in a group whether you succeeded or you failed. It opens up a world.'
> —WAYNE COYNE, THE FLAMING LIPS

The Lips are planning to spend some time in Los Angeles around the release date, doing TV shows and playing events. They also will play one-off dates at festivals like Treasure Island in San Francisco and Voodoo Fest in New Orleans, and they're planning to return to their hometown of Oklahoma City to participate in the annual March of 1,000 Flaming Skeletons on Halloween. "Last year CNN covered it and 30,000 people came to the parade," Booker says.

The Lips will then head to Europe and the United States in November, and they're planning U.S. tour dates in the spring.

"The live show is the path in for a lot of new fans," Booker says. "When they play festivals, people come over to watch them and get drawn in. It's the best way to reach the kids. I also think this album will appeal to the kids, because it has a rawer sound."

Booker says the band also gets plenty of exposure from licensing opportunities. "We never got 'Do You Realize??' on the radio, but it was in a VH1 commercial, and that turned a lot of people on to us," he says. "After Dell Computers used 'The Wand,' we saw an increase in single sales. And the Lips have songs that can work anywhere in the world; we put 'The Yeah Yeah Yeah Song' in an ad for soda in South Africa, because everyone understands 'Yeah yeah yeah/no no no.' " He adds that as of yet, there aren't licensing deals in place for "Embryonic," due to the label's desire to keep the album under wraps.

Warner and the Lips won't be actively pursuing radio airplay with the new album. "We serviced a three-song EP to radio and we're planning on sending the full album out, too," Osborn says. "It will go to multiple formats, and we'll welcome airplay, but there is nothing in the sense of a traditional radio campaign for this band."

"Radio has never really been available to us," Booker says. " 'She Don't Use Jelly' was a happy accident that happened at a totally different time."

"We were on tour with groups that were selling millions of records, like Stone Temple Pilots and Candlebox," Coyne says of the early '90s. "They were having a lot of success, but I don't know if we really ever would pursue that type of success on our own. We were starting to be like, 'We're just taking whatever comes.' So when we got asked to be on 'Beverly Hills 90210,' if it would've been six months earlier, we probably would've still had some control issues left over from what we thought our group's manifesto meant. But by then we knew that if we were lucky, there were going to be a lot of absurd things that you could experience if you just let shit happen. Once we did that, I think it became a lot more fun to be in a group whether you succeeded or you failed. It opens up a world." ••••

with ROSANNE CASH

By KEN TUCKER

A consummate Renaissance woman, Rosanne Cash has eschewed genre conventions throughout her long career. Of course, she had an excellent role model, being the eldest daughter of the late Johnny Cash. She scored her own string of country hits in the '80s and continues to record, as well as write books and contribute fiction and essays to such publications as the New York Times and Rolling Stone.

Her latest album, "The List," due Oct. 6 on EMI's Manhattan Records, is a collection of covers based on a list of 100 essential country songs that her father gave her when she was 18.

Produced by Cash's husband, John Leventhal, "The List" includes Hank Snow's "I'm Movin' On" and Hank Williams' "Take These Chains From My Heart," as well as duets with Bruce Springsteen, Elvis Costello, Rufus Wainwright and Wilco's Jeff Tweedy.

1 How did you react when your father first presented you with his list of essential country songs?

I was thrilled. I know people think, "Oh, 18 years old, you wouldn't have sense enough to know what you were getting." I did, because I had just started playing guitar. Helen Carter was teaching me all the Carter Family songs. I was really steeped in rock and pop music but it was a whole other landscape that I didn't realize existed except for the most obvious things—Patsy Cline and Ray Charles and my dad's music.

2 How did you narrow down a list of 100 songs to 13?

Some songs were clearly not suited for me to do—they were either too gender-specific or I couldn't do another version of "This Land Is Your Land." Then there was the vetting of which songs were suited to my voice. There was also a sonic and emotional balancing so that it wasn't all "Motherless Children" and "Bury Me Under the Weeping Willow"; it was also "Heartaches by the Number."

3 What role did your husband, John Leventhal, play in your interpretation of the songs?

John did all the heavy lifting; these are his arrangements. It was a pure joy for me to get to sing them, but it was a pure joy for him to get to this. This is the dream project for him that he's been waiting his whole life to do. He's the only New Yorker I know who has such a deep and extensive knowledge of roots music and country music.

4 These are some of the best and biggest songs of the last 100 years. Was it intimidating to cut them?

"She's Got You" was a little bit because I knew Patsy Cline's record so well, and "Girl From the North Country" was because it seemed like a watershed moment in musical history. I have these pictures of my dad and Bob [Dylan] together. But John said, "No, we're going to go to Bob's original version; that's the doorway into the song," and it was. Bob's original version is a classic folk song. The rest of them, no, I wasn't intimidated. I've been singing "Silver Wings" in the shower for 30 years.

5 On your blog you wrote that this was the only record you could have made at this point in your life. Why?

Because my parents are dead, and I had a pretty serious face-off with my own mortality. You think about the things you want to do most of all in the world. It felt like the perfect and the only thing to do.

You look back at your ancestry. You want to know where you come from, who you are and what you're going to pass on to your kids, and "The List" is the perfect cohesion of all of that.

6 Do you feel any connection with today's country music?

I don't listen to country radio but I often hear things that I think are fun and exciting and good. I don't know who a lot of the young people are or what they sound like, but the other day I was flipping through the channels and I saw Taylor Swift. I'd heard so much about her, she's sold millions and millions of records, but I'd never heard her sing. I saw her on a George Strait tribute and I thought, "Wow, this little girl is really good, she's really got something." That's always exciting, when you see somebody who is so young and you can see that spark in them. ••••

>>>BLAKE'S BACK

Two years after launching a five-album deal with Universal Classics & Jazz, the British classical crossover quartet Blake is out on its own. Its third album, "Together," will be released Oct. 12 in the United Kingdom on Blake Records, the act's EMI-distributed startup with the production house MPP.

Blake's 2007 self-titled debut album has sold 113,000 U.K. copies, according to the Official Charts Co., while its 2008 follow-up, "And So It Goes" (Decca/Universal), has sold 58,000.

While manager Steven Howard says the act subsequently departed Universal by mutual consent, MPP cofounder Nick Patrick says its new arrangement gives Blake creative control—and much more. "With a major-label deal, you have to sell up to 200,000 copies to see a profit," he says. "Here, they sell 30,000 copies and immediately see the money."

The album mixes classical material like "Ave Maria" and "Nessun Dorma" with more contemporary songs like U2's "With or Without You" and Charles Aznavour's "She." According to member Stephen Bowman, "There is enough for our existing audience to get their teeth into, but I hope it steps away from samey crossover."

"Together" appears in Denmark in late November, with other international releases scheduled for 2010. Blake plays U.K. shows Nov. 7-10, then Danish dates Nov. 23-Dec. 20 with further international touring planned, booked by the Agency Group, accompanying the album's international rollout. —Hazel Davis

>>>THINK PINK

Having been featured prominently in U.K. critics' tips for the coming year in January, it's perhaps predictable that London-based alt-rock band the Big Pink is garnering critical acclaim for its debut album, "A Brief History of Love" (4AD).

Mixing droning feedback, anthemic choruses and dark electronica, the 11-track album was released Sept. 14 in the United Kingdom and Europe ahead of its Alternative Distribution Alliance-distributed U.S. bow Sept. 22.

"This album will last a long time," 4AD managing director Simon Halliday says, describing the act's atmospheric mix of gritty electronica and psychedelic rock as "powerful stuff that connected with us straight away."

"A Brief History" was streamed on the band's Web site for one week (beginning Aug. 3), which Halliday says immediately generated heavy blog chatter, boosting the band's profile internationally.

Booked by London-based EC1 Music, the Big Pink launches a U.K. tour Oct. 8, followed by European dates. A U.S. tour booked through New York-based the Agency Group runs Nov. 13-Dec. 6. Halliday anticipates additional European and American treks to take place next year.

The Big Pink is published by Chrysalis Music, which scored a breakthrough U.S. synch deal when its album track "Dominos" was used to trail a recent run of the British TV teen drama "Skins" on BBC America. —Richard Smirke

>>>LISA LISA

Teenaged Aussie folk-pop singer/songwriter Lisa Mitchell is looking to export her domestic success to the United Kingdom this fall.

The national modern rock radio network Triple J championed Mitchell's music Down Under, helping her debut album, "Wonder," hit No. 6 on the Australian Recording Industry Assn. chart following its release July 31 on Warner Music.

Although she initially emerged as a finalist on the 2006 season of "Australian Idol," Mitchell has shrugged off any "reality TV" stigma. "Lisa is such a unique artist," says her London-based manager Stuart Clarke. "We've never felt any need for any smoke and mirrors; it's been about finding the right platforms for exposure and leaving people to it."

Ironically, though, it was TV that stirred international label interest in Mitchell, whose publishing is handled through Sony/ATV—her song "Neopolitan Dreams" was placed in a U.K./Europe ad for Surf detergent, which has been airing since October 2008. Further synch deals followed for Kraft (United States), Vodafone (Iceland) and 3G (Australia).

RCA/Sony Music duly signed Mitchell for the world outside Australia. A full release is due Oct. 26, with international releases being planned. Clarke says Mitchell will focus her attention on the United States in 2010. The singer will play 14 U.K. shows Oct. 9-27 supporting singer/songwriter Newton Faulkner, booked through Helter Skelter. —Jen Wilson

Island

Release Date: Sept. 29

In the past decade, Ghostface Killah has moved away from the esoteric beats of his Wu-Tang Clan cuts to explore buttery soul rhythms. On his new album, "Ghostdini: The Wizard of Poetry in Emerald City," the rapper dives head-first into R&B and the results are more mixed than his hip-hop output but nonetheless intriguing. On the first single, "Baby," Ghostface spits come-ons between a soaring chorus by Raheem DeVaughn, while "Guest House" showcases a moody tale of betrayal with Fabolous popping up as the other man. As always, Ghostface's penchant for storytelling is the main attraction, with each verse displaying impeccable detail and confidence that commands attention. While the album's softer instrumentation and thematic preoccupation with romance may initially frustrate some diehard rap fans, its silky hooks begin to sink in with repeated listens. "The Wizard of Poetry" represents a curious departure in Ghostface's discography, but after his heavy-handed past work, the set is an entertaining breather.—JL

KRIS KRISTOFFERSON

Closer to the Bone

Producer: Don Was

New West Records

Release Date: Sept. 29

As the title suggests, Kris Kristofferson's newest album, "Closer to the Bone," is an attempt to reach new depths of vulnerability—a portrait of an old man, laid bare following his 2006 opus, "This Old Road" (which was his first recording after a 12-year hiatus). Folk relies heavily on the willingness of the artist to be confessional. Now, considering himself near the end of his life, Kristofferson is exposing himself more than ever before, exploring death and love from this new mortal perspective. On the song "From Here to Forever," Kristofferson sings tenderly in his familiar bear-like smoky growl, "Here's one I wrote for my kids"; and on the title track, "I'll love you from here to forever." Kristofferson returned to veteran folk molder Don Was to helm the recording and also to contribute bass to the intimate, live-feeling instrumentation. With "Closer to the Bone" Kristofferson digs deep into his long and troubled past to bring listeners one of his most beautiful moments.—LJW

American Ride

Producers: Toby Keith, Mark Wright

Show Dog Nashville

Release Date: Oct. 6

There's a little less bluster and bravado on Toby Keith's latest album, "American Ride," and it's a welcome turn. Keith has always understood how to connect with his loyal fans, and he may have sensed their need for a break from the in-your-face feel of his most recent albums. The track "Are You Feelin' Me" is a rare show of vulnerability from the Oklahoma native, while "Woke Up on My Own" finds the singer facing his own limitations. Dave Koz's saxophone is a perfect accompaniment to the tender and touching "Cryin' for Me (Wayman's Song)," a tribute to former NBA star/jazz musician Wayman Tisdale, who died in May. The fiddle- and steel guitar-laden "You Can't Read My Mind" and the I'm-a-lug-but-you-love-me-anyway "Tender As I Wanna Be" are destined to be dancefloor favorites. But "American Ride" isn't completely chutzpah. The first single/title track is the only song on the set that Keith didn't have a hand in writing—it's a look at America and all its foibles. Meanwhile, the rocking and rousing tune "Loaded" celebrates the workingman's night on the town.—KT

JOSHUA BELL

Producer: Steven Epstein

Sony Classical

Release Date: Sept. 29

The Grammy Award-winning violinist Joshua Bell returns with "At Home With Friends," a star-studded album of marquee-level duets with guest artists like Sting, Josh Groban and Chris Botti. If the term "classical crossover" sends you running for cover, fear not: This is one duets album that packs a sonic—and celebrity—punch. The new album finds Bell's virtuosic violin amid a wide array of musical genres—a jazz-inspired reading of George Gershwin's "I Loves You Porgy" (alongside trumpeter Botti), the bluegrass-drenched "Look Away" (featuring Nickel Creek's mandolin master Chris Thile) and even a foray into Argentine tango on Astor Piazzolla's "Oblivion." Other standout sparring partners include pianist Dave Grusin (on Tom Jobim's "Chovendo Na Roseira") and perennial favorite Sting on "Come Again," from his classical album "Songs From the Labyrinth." Much more than just a publicity vehicle, "At Home With Friends" is an inspired, moving musical affair.—JR

ZERO 7

Yeah Ghost

Producers: Sam Hardaker, Henry Binns

Atlantic Records

Release Date: Sept. 29

What is Zero 7 without its unofficial, clear-voiced frontwoman Sia Furler, who left amicably last year to pursue a solo career? The answer: something very different yet unmistakably Zero 7. Singer/songwriter Eska takes over the alpha woman role on "Yeah Ghost," the fourth studio album from production masterminds Sam Hardaker and Henry Binns. From her first appearance on the overtly funky song "Mr McGee," Eska diverts the duo from its usual path of heady atmospherics into earthier sounds and tones. The first single, "Medicine Man," struts like Sam Sparro's "Black and Gold" and calls out a lover's lies as "simply outrageous," while the more adventurous "Sleeper" is half hooky pop refrain and half minimal synth smudges. The music on "Yeah Ghost" is still Zero 7—but after a few cans of musical Red Bull. For proof, check out the lush textures and brushed snares on "Pop Art Blue," which features wide-eyed vocals from Martha Tilston.—KM

SELENA GOMEZ & THE SCENE

Kiss & Tell

Hollywood Records

Release Date: Sept. 29

"Tell me, tell me, tell me something I don't know," Selena Gomez sings on the final cut on her debut album, "Kiss & Tell." Considering how closely the new set follows similarly situated tween-pop efforts by Miley Cyrus and Demi Lovato, Gomez's fans might share the sentiment: It's not always easy to tell what distinguishes the work of this "Wizards of Waverly Place" TV star from that of her fellow Disney-factory females. That doesn't mean "Kiss & Tell" doesn't deliver its required payload of electro-rock delights. The song "Naturally" (produced by Mouse House regulars Tim James and Antonina Armato) has a juicy and instantly memorable vocal hook, while the pop-punk title track expertly channels the good-natured sass of the Go-Go's (no surprise, given drummer Gina Schock's co-writing credit). But if Gomez wants to outlast her current context, her music could use more of her in it.—MW

DGC/Interscope

Release Date: Sept. 29

AFI's eighth studio album, "Crash Love," remains faithful to the arena-ready pop noir that made the rock band a multiplatinum superstar earlier this decade. Singer Davey Havok once again puts on his best Smiths-esque strut while dancing his way through glammy new wave beats, bouncy rhythm sections and first-pumping choruses. The track "End Transmission" is dressed up in '80s charm, bolstered by a punchy bassline and pounding keys, while gang chants and pulsating synths pepper "I Am Trying Very Hard to Be Here." Listeners will be hard pressed to find a single screamed vocal; it's as if AFI has finally made the transition from "Nightmare Before Christmas"-like spook punk to polished goth-pop. Even though "Crash Love" isn't terribly progressive in scope and the band's '80s idolatry might one day run its course, the set is ultimately another highlight in a discography that's as consistent as it is expansive.—EL potential of being viewed by some listeners as boring. But Owen brainchild Mike Kinsella manages to avoid both fates on his latest effort, "New Leaves." Kinsella (who now records as a solo artist under the name Owen, following a long career in such indie rock bands as Cap'n Jazz, Joan of Arc and Aloha) plays the same sort of soft ballads found on his previous albums. But don't mistake the softness for weakness. While nothing is as biting as the aging hipster takedown "Femme Fatale" (from his 2006 set "At Home With Owen"), he pulls out the knives and slices pseudo-intellectuals on "A Trenchant Critique." Elsewhere, he accepts domesticity on "Amnesia and Me," giving up his past and declaring, "I know who I am/A housebroken, one-woman man."—CH

MUSE
The Resistance
Producer: Mike Sapone
Warner Bros. Records
Release Date: Sept. 15

British rock act Muse's fifth album, "The Resistance," shows growth from the band's previous releases and proves that it's primed for a global musical takeover. The album opener, "Uprising," carries a pulsating bass and drum groove, while the band's singer/guitarist Matthew Bellamy provides call-to-arms lyrics ("Rise up and take the power back/It's time that/The fat cats had a heart attack"), which hypnotize the listener into a revolutionary-like state. The song "United States of Eurasia" opens with a docile verse but quickly progresses with a falsetto vocal line and accompanying guitar riff that break open a larger-than-life chorus and a Middle Eastern-sounding bridge reminiscent of Queen. The three-part rock symphony "Exogenesis" closes the album, combining elements of piano and the band's dramatic flair. The evolution of Muse is likely far from over, and "The Resistance" teases what the band still has up its sleeve.—ECJ

Skyscraper Music Maker
Release Date: Sept. 8

Hard rock fans itching for Andrew W.K. to release a new single like his 2001 hit "Party Hard" will be sorely disappointed by the musician's fifth album, "55 Cadillac," which consists entirely of piano improvisations. The wordless set will likely be perceived as too abstract by some fans, but comparisons to Andrew W.K.'s previous work fail to recognize the virtuoso performance he delivers on these eight tracks. The song "Seeing the Car" is an uplifting composition, while "City Time" is much more manic, with a quiet beginning slowly giving way to a racing arrangement. For Andrew W.K.—who has also released two albums of Japanese pop covers—the departure from the muscular rock anthems isn't exactly jarring; more surprising is the daring attitude with which he approaches these winding, free-form songs. "55 Cadillac" offers a fun, technically exciting journey that paints Andrew W.K. as an artist unafraid of risks.—JL

On the heels of Ghostface Killah and Raheem DeVaughn's "Baby," 50 Cent's "Baby by Me" is another shout-out to lucrative childbearing, as the pragmatic Queens rapper offers a woman the chance to "have a baby by me, baby, be a millionaire." This is 50's fourth try at a lead single for "Before I Self Destruct," now set for release Nov. 17. With its club synthesizers and Ne-Yo-aided chorus, the track is far more radio-friendly than his past attempts. But it's also the least distinctive. A song like "Baby by Me" that overtly reaches for a pop audience may put 50 Cent back on the airwaves, but it won't necessarily energize the rapper's core fans. At this point, they might be more receptive to hearing something outside the box.—JS

Honor Society wraps post-breakup angst into a cathartic, three-minute package on "Over You," the opening track from the group's just-released debut album, "Fashionably Late." The song is delivered with fierce precision by band members (and Jonas Brothers protégés) Michael Bruno, Jason Rosen, Andrew Lee and Alexander Noyes. Its production is taut and unabashedly pop but also offers some added spice with a driving backbeat, pulsing synths and guitar licks worthy of arena rock. The lyrics are about stewing over an ex-girlfriend and the vocal riffs are short and smart, leaving space for the music to breathe. In those gaps of silence, inhale shifts to exhale and romantic frustration becomes fun. If this is what a breakup sounds like, it just might be worth the pain.—SG

"Home Again," the new single from Queensrÿche's powerful "American Soldier" album, could recapture the mainstream glory that the band achieved with its 1991 dream ballad, "Silent Lucidity." The lyrics—an exchange between a military man and his daughter who miss each other—are sung by frontman Geoff Tate and his own 10-year-old daughter Emily, who gives a rich vocal performance for her age. In less capable hands, the interpretation would have felt overdramatic; instead, a profound sense of sadness and hope intermingle among wavering guitar lines, gritty drum beats and gliding strings. The universal theme of separation from a loved one pairs well with the melody, which flows like soothing water over a wound. "Home Again"—and Queensrÿche—rightfully command a strong radio salute.—CLT

KRIS ALLEN
Live Like We're Dying (3:32)

Writers: various
Publishers: various 19/Jive

"American Idol" winner Kris Allen has wisely chosen to scrap his Kara DioGuardi-penned coronation song, "No Boundaries," in favor of this impressive new single about seizing the day. "We only got 864 hundred seconds in a day/To turn it all around or to throw it all away/Gotta tell 'em that we love 'em while we got the chance to say," he sings. "Live Like We're Dying" was originally intended for Irish band the Script, but Allen improves on the unreleased version with a nuanced vocal and a nimble, rhythmic delivery. The tongue-twister verses work in spite of themselves, and even when Allen does his best Bob Dylan impression on the bridge, he emerges safely on the other side. It seems Allen is still emboldened by the risks he took on "Idol," and those who voted for the singer/songwriter in May should be feeling the same after hearing the first track from his Nov. 17 debut.—MH

ALICIA KEYS
Doesn't Mean Anything (4:28)
Producers: Alicia Keys, Kerry "Krucial" Brothers
Writers: A. Keys, K. Brothers Jr.
Publishers: Lellow Productions/EMI, Book of Daniel Music/EMI (ASCAP)
J Records

A truly confident woman lets herself be vulnerable at the right time. This is the message that Alicia Keys' latest single exudes, as she lets her guard down and admits that she's incomplete without the man she loves. "From afar, it seems I had it all," Keys belts on the midtempo track's chorus, "but it doesn't mean anything since you're gone." It's not the first time she's wrought inspiration from love-stricken lyrics. In fact, "Doesn't Mean a Thing" is just the latest addition to a lengthy list of her empowering tracks, and it can easily be compared to previous hits like "Wonder Woman" and "No One." But the comparisons are more than welcome, because—as Keys understands so well—everyone needs love, no matter how independent they may be.—MC

Gloria Gaynor Celebrates 30th Anniversary Of 'I Will Survive'

Happy anniversary: GLORIA GAYNOR

To Gloria Gaynor, it seems like only yesterday that she recorded the iconic disco/pop hit "I Will Survive." Now she's celebrating the anthem's 30th anniversary.

"How is that possible?" she asks with a laugh during a concert stop earlier this week in Bologna, Italy. "I'm only 29."

Still averaging 100 to 150 concert dates per year, Gaynor is currently overseas performing shows in Moscow, Amsterdam and Spain. After that, she will return stateside to promote the Oct. 27 digital release of an updated recording of "Survive" in English and Spanish plus a self-penned gospel ballad, "He Gave Me Life (I Will Survive)." The songs will be released through the singer's own Glolo label (her childhood nickname) in association with digital distributor INgrooves. In turn, all three songs will be available on CD through Gaynor's Web site, GloriaGaynor.com.

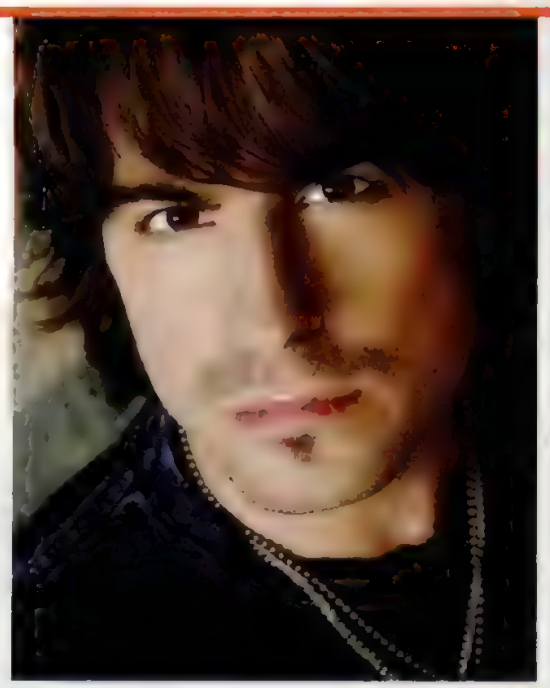
"I Will Survive" survived its own challenges in the beginning. Written by Freddie Perren and Dino Fekaris, the track was initially pegged as the B-side to a song called "Substitute" that Polydor brass wanted Gaynor to record. Perren agreed to produce "Substitute" in exchange for choosing the B-side.

"Freddie and Dino said they'd been looking for someone to record 'Survive' for a long time," recalls Gaynor. "I'm reading the lyrics and saying, 'Are you kidding me? This is a hit song.' But when we took it back to the label execs, they wouldn't listen to it."

Gaynor was confronting personal challenges as well. Her mother had recently passed away and the singer had to record "Survive" in a back brace owing to surgery on her spine a month earlier. "That's why I was able to sing the song with so much conviction," says Gaynor.

After a Studio 54 DJ got wind of the song, other club DJs began flipping the single over to play "Survive." Then radio chimed in and the label's hand was forced. While "Substitute" languished at No. 107 on pop, "Survive" danced all the way to No. 1 on the chart in 1979.

Since Gaynor earned a Grammy Award for best disco song in 1980, "Survive" has taken on a life of its own. Morphing from disco hit to empowerment anthem, "Survive" has been covered more than 200 times by everyone from Dame Shirley Bassey and Diana Ross to Cake and assorted "American Idol" wannabes. Gaynor's favorite covers? Those by Gladys Knight and Chantay Savage.



Not too long ago, Gaynor performed the song on Capitol Hill in support of the Performance Rights Act. "This should have been done a long time ago," she declares. "Writers get paid and rightfully so; publishers get paid and rightfully so. But what about the singers? It's the fair thing to do."

Five days prior to the "Survive" rerelease, Gaynor will participate in a Q&A and a live performance at the Grammy Museum Oct. 22 in Los Angeles. That will be followed by a guest stint on "The View" and a performance in this year's Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade. On tap for 2010: The release of Gaynor's yet-untitled gospel album and a symphony tour in Australia. The former will feature traditional selections as well as "He Gave Me Life" and other original Gaynor compositions. "After 30 years of telling people I will survive, it's time to tell them how," she says.

Although Gaynor has rung up a string of hits including "Never Can Say Goodbye," "I Am What I Am" and "I Never Knew," she will forever be tied to her signature ode. And that doesn't bother her in the least.

"From the beginning I recognized it was a timeless lyric that everyone could relate to," says Gaynor, "so I don't get tired of singing it. I'm always freshening it up; changing the beat, the lyrics, modernizing the arrangement—I've even stuck a hip-hop section in the middle of it. I become 295% grade A ham when I do this song because people still love it." ...

CROSS COUNTRY

With a little help from his friends, Valory artist Jimmy Wayne enters Hot Country Songs at No. 51, snaring the chart's Hot Shot Debut with "Sara Smile." His friends are none other than the song's featured guests, Hall & Oates: The singers and songwriters who originally took "Sara Smile" to No. 4 on the Billboard Hot 100 in 1976. (The entire 60-position Hot Country Songs chart is viewable at billboard.biz/charts.) ¶ Wayne's performance of the ballad during an audition helped secure his first record deal. The singer/songwriter has since become friends with John Oates, collaborating with the music vet on various projects. When Wayne claimed his first No. 1, "Do You Believe Me Now," on Hot Country Songs last year, Oates traveled to Nashville and performed with Wayne onstage at a celebratory industry bash. ¶ With its debut on Hot Country Songs, "Sara Smile" becomes the ninth former Hot 100 hit to land on the country tally in an updated version that also includes the original artist. The accompanying chart lists those aforementioned covers that have appeared since Hot Country Songs converted to Nielsen BDS-monitored data in 1990. —Gary Trust

Step By Step

Jesse & Joy Spark Top 20 Stateside Hit With 'Adios'

Mexican brother-and-sister duo Jesse & Joy's sophomore set, "Electricidad," debuted at No. 14 on the Billboard Top Latin Albums chart this week. And while that represents less than 1,300 copies these days, the singer/songwriters are busy spreading their music around in a lot more places than just retail.

Jesse & Joy won a Latin Grammy Award for best new artist in 2007 on the strength of their 2006 debut Warner album, "Esta Es Mi Vida." It went platinum in Mexico with sales of more than 100,000 copies. Jesse & Joy's music has since been used in campaigns for Verizon's VCast music store, JC Penney and Old Navy; the pair even composed the theme song for the hit telenovela "Las Tontas No Van Al Cielo," a Televisa-produced soap that aired in the United States on Univision. Jesse & Joy also appeared in "High School Musical: El Desafío," Disney's Spanish-language film production of the franchise in Mexico.

Stateside connection: JESSE & JOY

Though promotion of Jesse & Joy in the United States was slow to take off at first, the siblings have now scored their biggest stateside radio hit so far with "Adios," which holds at No. 17 this week on Billboard's Hot Latin Songs chart. The 26-year-old Jesse and the 23-year-old Joy will perform this month in New York and Houston as part of the Latin extension of the Grammy Celebration Concert Tour series presented by T-Mobile Sidekick.

"If you sit down and listen to the first album, you feel like there's a band playing live for you," says Joy Huerta, who wrote much of the new album with her brother while they were on tour. "Electricidad" possesses a bigger, more textured pop-rock sound with touches of British and glam rock, but "it's still that same feeling," adds Joy.

Featured in Wal-Mart's "Soundcheck" series, Jesse & Joy are also integrating a green message into their promotion of "Electricidad." The duo linked up with the Natural Resources Defense Council's "La Onda Verde" campaign to create a viral video with Earth-friendly tips. Visitors to AdiosGlobalWarming.com can submit their ideas on how to fight global warming to win an acoustic concert by Jesse & Joy at a school, university or park; tree-planting activities are also in the works.

The Latin Grammy win "made us push ourselves," says Joy. "It helped people get to know us from different parts of the world that hadn't heard us yet." The bilingual Huertas, who have an American mother, would eventually like to record in English. "But," Joy notes, "we're trying to go step by step. We're trying not to eat the world in one bite." ••••

TREE CLIMBING

Loyal following: PORCUPINE TREE

On paper, Porcupine Tree is a band whose success is a little puzzling. The progressive rock act's songs are lengthy, complex works that almost defy commercial arplay. Band leader Steven Wilson refuses to give away his music and ensures his CDs are experienced as complete albums by wrapping them in elaborate packaging instead of offering them as digital bundles.

Despite these uncommmercial proclivities, Porcupine Tree has been amassing a loyal following since 1987. The latest evidence: Fans snatched up all 10,000 limited-edition copies of its new album, "The Incident" (Sept. 22, Roadrunner). They contained two CDs, a DVD and two books (one of photos, one of illustrations) that complemented the record for $109, according to manager Andy Leff. (Double-CD and three-disc vinyl sets are also available.)

Why has Porcupine Tree developed such a rabid following? Wilson believes that despite the "dumbing down" of culture by entertainment like reality TV, "there is definitely an equal and kind of opposite reaction against that by people who still want something with a little bit of emotional resonance, emotional depth . . . something they can immerse themselves in and kind of appreciate over many listens."

"The Incident" is a loose, semiautobiographical collection of songs "under this umbrella of being incidents of significant points in life, life-changing events," Wilson says. The most poignant example is the lead single, "Time Flies." In it, Wilson reflects on his mortality and celebrates his birth year, 1967—a milestone year for rock music.

Leff says that to market "The Incident," Porcupine Tree is repeating the strategy used for 2007's "Fear of a Blank Planet" (53,000 sold, according to Nielsen SoundScan), which "privatized" the album's marketing by hiring the independent publicity firm Shore Fire Media to contact critics like Rolling Stone senior editor David Fricke, who's become a fan. "We'll always support the people who supported us," Leff says, "but we want Jon Pareles of the New York Times. We're looking for artistic validation, not just genre-specific press."

To that end, Porcupine Tree hosted two listening sessions in 5.1 surround sound this summer for journalists. "We take everyone's BlackBerries and cell phones away, give them a pad of paper and a pen, and make them sit for an hour and listen," Leff says. "And they love it."

Besides debuting the "Time Flies" video on AOL Spinner, Porcupine Tree hosted a listening party Sept. 24 at its Terminal 5 performance in New York. The band started a two-week U.S. tour Sept. 15 in Seattle and will launch a European leg Oct. 5 that will run through December. The band's Web site, PorcupineTree.com, acts as the focal point of the group's universe, where people can stream music and purchase it from the site's download store.

"This whole album cycle is almost like a cycle of disengaging from the mainstream and becoming a self-contained enterprise," Leff says.

MUSIC FOR EVERYBODY

It's a long way from Possum Kingdom, S.C., to Disney's Hollywood studios and Boston's Paradise Rock Club. But NeedToBreathe is accustomed to covering a lot of territory geographically—and musically. Buoyed by extensive touring and key film and TV placements, the Atlantic mainstream rock band's third album, "The Outsiders" (released Aug. 21), has spun off two chart-climbing songs: "Something Beautiful" and "Lay 'Em Down."

The former, which moves 21-20 this week on Triple A, is the act's second top 20 single on that chart. Meanwhile, "Down" rises 11-8 on Hot Christian Songs, the band's third top 10 on that tally. "The Outsiders"—the follow-up to 2007's "The Heat" and 2006's "Daylight"—debuted at No. 20 on the Billboard 200 and has sold 37,000 units, according to Nielsen SoundScan. It debuted at No. 2 on Billboard's Top Christian Albums chart and holds the No. 3 slot this week.

Though signed to Atlantic, NeedToBreathe is also being marketed and distributed to Christian consumers through Word Records. But the band is quick to note it shouldn't be classified as just a Christian rock act. "We appreciate that there are many ways to get our music out to the public," says lead vocalist Bear Rhinehart, speaking for drummer Joe Stillwell, bassist Seth Bolt and guitarist/brother Bo Rinehart. "And our faith is really important to us. But one thing we don't appreciate is people calling us a Christian rock band. The implication is that you have to share our faith to like our music and that's not true. We make music for everybody."

The group's musical diversity has opened the door to various TV and film placements. "Something Beautiful" will appear in the new film "When in Rome," due in January 2010. Another "Outsiders" track, "These Hard Times," was featured on NBC-TV's new drama series "Mercy."

The band's live appeal is another success-building factor. "One of the greatest assets we have with this band is their power live," notes Anthony Delia, Atlantic Records senior director of A&R and marketing. "They are great, both electrically and acoustically. We'll win if people just see them play."

Jay-Z Holds At No. 1 While VMAs Shine On Charts

Jay-Z remains at No. 1 on the Billboard 200 with "The Blueprint 3," which sells 298,000 copies (down just 37%) in its second week. The Roc Nation set bowed atop the chart last week with 476,000. Traditionally, No. 1 debuts that start with huge sales weeks have a steeper second-week decline.

However, Jay-Z's drop was fairly soft for a couple of reasons. Last week was the album's first proper week of availability, as the set had its off-cycle Friday, Sept. 11, release pushed up to Tuesday, Sept. 8, at the last minute, and many retailers didn't have the set until later that week. So, its 476,000 start could have been much bigger.

Also, the set probably got some sales traction from its placement in Target's circular last weekend, where it was advertised for $9.98. Jay-Z also performed on the premiere of NBC's "Jay Leno Show" on Monday, Sept. 14, and the residual buzz from his MTV Video Music Awards performance on Sunday, Sept. 13, likely bled into the current sales week.

Speaking of the VMAs, the song that closed the show, Jay-Z and Alicia Keys' "Empire State of Mind," rockets 50-5 with Greatest Gainer/Digital honors on the Billboard Hot 100. It sells 205,000 downloads (up 374%) and vaults 23-1 on Hot Digital Songs.

Back on the Billboard 200, Whitney Houston's "I Look to You" climbs one spot to No. 2 with 156,000 copies—up 77%. The album's sales gain is due to Houston's much-publicized two-day stand (Sept. 14-15) on "The Oprah Winfrey Show." In three weeks, the album has sold 548,000 copies.

Looking ahead to next week, Pearl Jam is on course to nab its first No. 1 album on the Billboard 200 in 13 years. Industry prognosticators suggest the band's new "Backspacer," released on Sunday, Sept. 20, could sell between 175,000 and 200,000 copies by week's end.

VMAs PACK PUNCH: MTV's annual Video Music Awards show smiles on the Billboard 200 as a number of eye-popping gains come likely as a direct result of the program. It's no wonder, as the show earned nearly 9 million viewers, according to Nielsen, the most for the VMAs since 2004.

Pink, who performed an acrobatic version of "Sober," sees her "Funhouse" album fly 63-28 with Pacesetter stripes, signifying the chart's greatest percentage increase—it's up 95%. Lady GaGa's "The Fame" benefits from the performer's best new artist win and her dramatic rendition of "Paparazzi" as the album climbs 23-12 with a 76% increase.

Green Day, another winner/performer, skips 59-54 with "21st Century Breakdown" earning a 17% jump.

Taylor Swift, who took home the best female video award for "You Belong With Me" (and performed the song on the show), moves 10-8 with "Fearless" (up 37%). Meanwhile, her self-titled debut—which is still on the chart—rises 48-45 (up 21%). Her unexpected VMA acceptance speech visitor, Kanye West, isn't on the Billboard 200 this week. His last set, "808s & Heartbreak," has been absent from the chart for the past month and declines 7% in sales this week, selling less than 2,000.

Collectively, the album catalogs of all of the major VMA performers gained 40% in sales this week. That includes the aforementioned acts along with Beyoncé, Muse, Janet Jackson and Alicia Keys. (However, it's an unfair comparison to lump in the sales of Jay-Z's brand-new "The Blueprint 3" and "Blueprint Collector's Edition" and Muse's "Resistance," so they aren't counted in our tally.)

REMEMBERED: The Sept. 14 passing of actor Patrick Swayze causes some unsurprising surges in sales this week.

The soundtrack to his smash 1987 film "Dirty Dancing" re-enters the Top Soundtrack chart (see page 64) at No. 13 with 3,000 copies (up 390%) while a 20th-anniversary version of the album re-enters at No. 20 with fewer than 2,000 copies sold (up 446%).

The album's signature tune, "(I've Had) The Time of My Life," by Bill Medley and Jennifer Warnes, sold 6,000 downloads (up 444%). Swayze's own soundtrack contribution, the No. 3 Billboard Hot 100 hit "She's Like the Wind," went from selling fewer than 1,000 downloads to nearly 8,000 (up 1,351%). ....

The album earns the greatest gain in units this week (up 68,000 copies, a 77% increase), thanks to Houston's much-publicized two-day stand on "The Oprah Winfrey Show" Sept. 14 and 15.

The rock trio enters with 128,000 copies, a career-high for the act. That figure more than doubles the band's previous best week, when 2006's "Black Holes and Revelations" debuted and peaked at No. 9 with 48,000.

41

The CD version of the album streeted last week, following its Aug. 25 premiere on vinyl. Now with all configurations available, including digital, it properly debuts with 13,000.

47

A stunning re-entry greets the set (12,000, up 1,975%), which first debuted a month ago at No. 48 from a digital-only bow Aug. 11. On Sept. 15, the physical CD hit retail.

98

This is likely the band's Sept. 15 performance on "The Tonight Show With Conan O'Brien" and a new Cadillac TV spot featuring the album's "Lisztomania" that help spur the set's 40% increase.

116 His ninth charted album, and his first since 2004's No. 86-peaking "Halcyon Days," marks his second-best rank since 1995. The set, which features his 9- and 11-year-old sons Keith and Russell, is his first for Verve.

143 The rock supergroup—Conor Oberst, Jim James, Mike Mogis and M. Ward—starts with an early digital release at Amazon's MP3 store before the CD arrived Sept. 22.

146 Amazon's MP3 store discounted the set Sept. 17 for $1.99, likely sparking the album's 26% gain.

147 The album bowed last week on Heatseekers Albums at No. 11 based on a week-early digital release, selling 2,000 copies. Now with the CD available, the combined sales jump to 3,000.

199 The 80% tumble of the set shouldn't be a surprise, since it was available in limited quantities. Meanwhile, the Vince Gill set falls off the chart, dropping 93% in its second week.

Ace Frehley debuts at No. 2 on Top Independent Albums and at No. 27 on the Billboard 200 with "Anamory" (1,000 copies). It's his highest debut on the latter chart and his best-charting album since his self-titled solo debut rose to No. 26 in 1979. Meanwhile, on Top Digital Albums, the compilation "99 Most Essential Baroque Masterpieces" bows at No. 11 with almost 1,000 sold. This digital-only set was sold as an Amazon MP3 store daily deal Sept. 18 for $1.99.

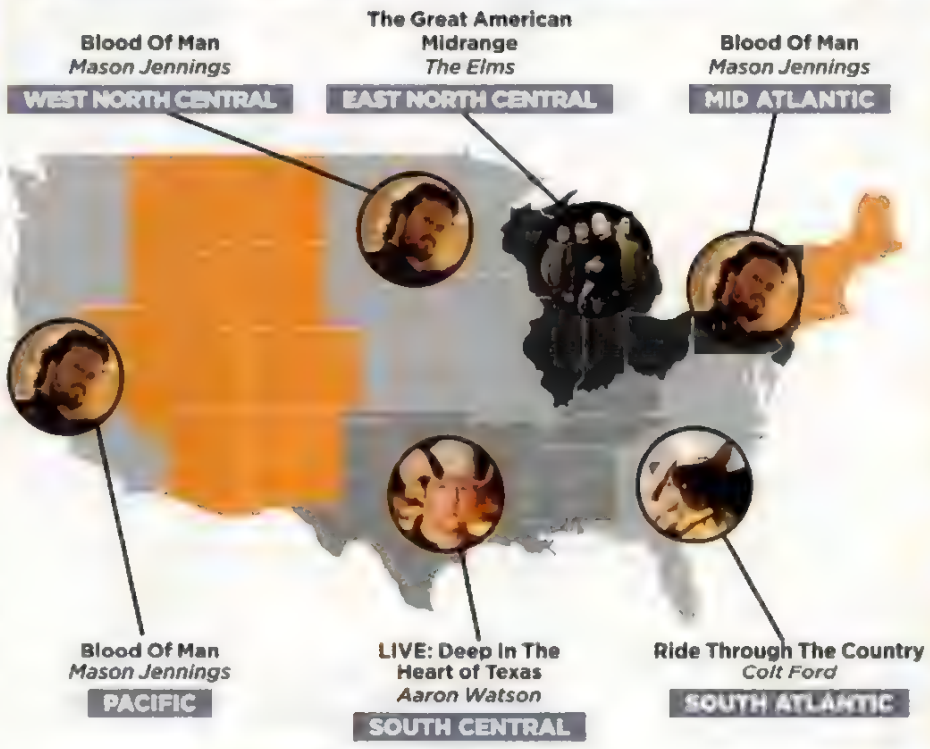
19 After its first—and, until this week, only—charting album, the rock band returns, in the wake of the success of the documentary "This Is Anvil."

20 The soprano notches her 18th top 10 on Top Classical Albums, as this set starts at No. 2 on the tally, blocked from the top by the discount compilation "99 Most Essential Baroque Masterpieces."



35 The female quintet strikes early, with the digital release of its debut set. The album's physical release will affect its chart position next week.

The singer continues to make those who voted her best new artist at the MTV Video Music Awards (Sept. 13) look smart. She joins Christina Aguilera and Fergie as the only women this decade to collect four top 10s from a debut album.

This superstar track (176,000 downloads sold) from the upcoming LeBron James documentary "More Than a Game" is one of eight songs to launch in the top 10 this year. Three belong to Miley Cyrus/Hannah Montana.

50

The British singer previews her second album "Echo," due Nov. 17, with a No. 22 start on Hot Digital Songs (52,000) and airplay on 74 stations.

90

The New Jersey rockers make it 25 songs in 25 years of charting on the Hot 100. The first single from "The Circle," due Nov. 10, bullets at No. 18 on Adult Top 40.

96

The track's release to digital retailers Sept. 22 will send the song soaring on next week's Hot 100 and Hot Digital Songs charts.

BETWEEN THE BULLETS

SWIFT MAKES CROSSOVER HISTORY

After becoming the first country artist to win an MTV Video Music Award, Taylor Swift continues her trailblazing ways, rising to No. 1 on Hot 100 Airplay. With an audience of 117 million, Swift's "You Belong With Me" edges the Black Eyed Peas' "I Gotta Feeling" by 25,000 impressions. Her song is the first country crossover track to top Hot 100 Airplay since the list began using Nielsen BDS data in December 1990. Among country artists who appeared on Hot 100 Airplay in that span, Shania Twain's "You're Still the One" (1998), Faith Hill's "Breathe" (2000) and Swift's "Love Story" (in March) each climbed as high as No. 2. —Gary Trust

Format veterans and rookies alike enjoy success on Mainstream Top 40.

The Black Eyed Peas extend their lead for the most hits among groups this decade, as "Meet Me Halfway" becomes their 13th chart entry at No. 36. Backstreet Boys and Nickelback rank second with 11 charted titles each in that span.

At No. 37, Pink charts a fourth track—the title cut—from her album "Funhouse." Among her albums, only "Missundaztood," from 2001 to 2003, previously yielded four charting songs.

Among the newcomers, Long Island, N.Y., quartet Push Play bows at No. 39 with "Midnight Romeo," the lead single from its debut album, "Bound." At No. 40, Iyaz opens with "Replay." The 22-year-old Virgin Islands native was discovered on MySpace by Sean Kingston, whose own "Face Drop" lifts 36-34, and the pair is touring Canada and the United States through November.

With 21.3 million impressions in its 32nd chart week, Church claims his first top 10. Before this, the singer's closest brush with the top tier was a No. 14 peak for his introductory single, "How 'Bout You," in July 2006.

Up 7.9 million impressions (a 61% increase), the feisty track crosses the Airpower threshold with Greatest Gainer honors in its third chart week. Her third album, "Play On," arrives at retail Nov. 3.

BETWEEN THE BULLETS

FAMILY AFFAIR

Country/bluegrass master Ricky Skaggs takes his fifth No. 1 bow on Top Bluegrass Albums, as "Solo Songs My Dad Loved" opens with 2,000 copies (No. 39 on Top Country Albums). It widens his lead as the artist with the most No. 1 debuts since the 15-position Bluegrass list launched seven years ago. With three top starts during that time, the Boulder, Colo.-based Yonder Mountain String Band is right behind Skaggs among the acts with the most No. 1 debuts. His first solo album since "Ancient Tones" in 1999, "Solo Songs" was the subject of a Sept. 18 "All Things Considered" segment on NPR. —Wade Jessen

BETWEEN THE BULLETS

DRAKE, KID CUDI HIT TOP FIVE

With an early debut due to street-date violations, Drake's "So Far Gone" soars 95-3 with Greatest Gainer honors. The seven-song EP contains selections from the rapper's previously released mixtape, including "Best I Ever Had" and "Successful," which will most likely also appear on his full-length album due next year. "Gone" debuts at No. 6 on the Billboard 200 with 73,000 sold (No. 6).

On the radio charts, "Successful" gives Drake consecutive trips to No. 1 on Mainstream R&B/Hip-Hop after "Best" spent seven weeks at the summit this summer.

Kid Cudi makes his R&B/Hip-Hop Albums debut at No. 5 and also at No. 4 on the Billboard 200 with 104,000 sold. His set is powered by "Day 'N' Nite," which peaked at No. 3 on the Billboard Hot 100 in May.

—Raphael George

While no artist has ever monopolized the top two positions of Adult R&B simultaneously, three singers have placed two songs in the top three. Maxwell is the latest to do so, with "Pretty Wings" (No. 1) and "Bad Habits" (No. 3). Fantasia and Alicia Keys accomplished the feat in 2005 and 2008, respectively.

The superstar posts the best debut of her career and the chart's third-highest debut in 2009. Only Maxwell's "Pretty Wings" (No. 22) and Whitney Houston's "I Look to You" (No. 27) have launched at higher ranks this year.

The [illegible]-based rapper lands his third top 10 on Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums (No. 4) and his first top 10 on the Billboard 200 (No. 7, 49,000 copies).

The female rapper from Lil Wayne's Young Money camp registers 2.8 million in audience (up 30%), with 13 stations adding airplay.

72

With the song's debut on this list and at No. 32 on Rhythmic, "I Am ... Sasha Fierce" is Beyonce's first album to earn six debuts on both charts.

88 & 96

Two familiar names return from its new album "No Regrets." Air-1-One logs its first entry in 13 years, while Toni Braxton, who last appeared in 2005, previews her next set, due in February.

Wisin & Yandel notch their 10th top five smash with "Gracias A Ti" on Latin Rhythm Airplay (moving 20-5 with 2.2 million in audience, up 108%). It extends their lead for most top fives on the chart to five. (Daddy Yankee is behind with 13.) "Gracias" also jumps 25-19 on Hot Latin Songs (6 million, up 25%).

Despite having the most No. 1s on Regional Mexican Albums (21), Los Tigres Del Norte are in second place for most No. 1s on Regional Mexican Airplay. With "La Granja" moving 5-1, (10.2 million in audience, up 43%), it becomes the act's 14th No. 1, just two shy of Conjunto Primavera's 16.

'PLAN' TO BE AMAZED

With her first Spanish-language release, "Mi Plan," selling nearly 13,000 copies, Nelly Furtado is enjoying the biggest sales week for a Latin set by a female this year. The last woman to post a bigger week was Jenni Rivera, with "Jenni" selling nearly 16,000 copies (Billboard, Sept. 27, 2008). Furtado lands atop Top Latin Albums and Top Latin Pop Albums, a feat that a crossover artist hasn't achieved since Jennifer Lopez's "Como Ama Una Mujer" did so in the April 14, 2007, issue. —Rauly Ramirez

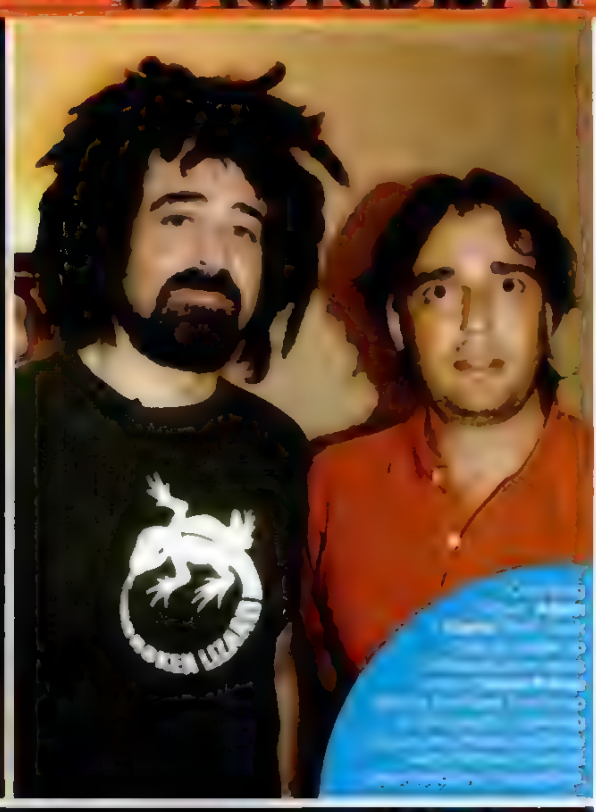
AIMP MEMBERS TO EDUCATE LOS ANGELES CLASSROOMS

The Assn. of Independent Music Publishers has recruited some of its members to speak with eighth grade classrooms at Bret Harte Preparatory Middle School Sept. 29 in Los Angeles about the importance of copyright preservation and career opportunities in the music business.



The event will launch the Operation Hope's Five Million Kids program, which is designed to encourage students to stay in school. AIMP's team of volunteer instructors will include Quincy Jones, Black Eyed Peas manager Ben Gross and Troy Carter, Coalition Media Group founder/CEO and Lady GaGa's manager. Additional speakers will include representatives from Universal Music Group, Disney, the Recording Academy and 20th Century Fox.

The volunteers from those companies will visit approximately 20 classrooms, reaching about 600 students, according to AIMP executive director Kasaan Steigen. "It's about role models," she says. "That's what we're doing on this day; giving students real people in their classrooms who can show them ways that school can be relevant." Operation Hope volunteers will also speak to approximately 700 other students about financial literary training.

JUST GETTING FIRED UP

"Our fans are definitely ready for new music," says Honeytribe frontman Devon Allman, whose first album, "Torch," is now more than 3 years old. And he intends to give them some fresh material in 2010.

Allman plans to start recording his next effort, "Space Age Blues," Jan. 2 at Ardent Studios in Memphis, where he also made "Torch." "I'm really excited about it," says the St. Charles, Mo.-based Allman, whose father is Gregg Allman. "The band has done over 1,000 shows since 'Torch' came out. The band was definitely in its infancy when we recorded 'Torch.' I know we're capable of so much more in the studio.

"And this time we have about twice as much time; I think we did 'Torch' in 12 days and mixed it in five. This one we're gonna have 30 days."

Allman and Honeytribe have been road-testing songs for the album, including such tracks as "Salvation," "Take Me to the Bridge," "I'm Ready" and "Endless Diamond." "They come from the same place as ["Torch"], but they're definitely a lot more artistic and feel-based," Allman says.

"I think the second record of anybody's career is what establishes them," he adds. "Anyone gets a debut. The second one, I think, determines whether you're gonna stay or go away. This is the one you go for broke on."

Racing tested it. Racing proved it. Racing inspired its reason for being. The beauty of the 911 is that in 46 years, it has never strayed from those roots. In fact, it's grown directly from them. So admire it. Glorify it, even. Just don't put it on a pedestal. There's no room to drive up there.

Streaming Vs. Downloading—The Coming Cash-Flow Crisis

BY ROBB McDANIELS

First it was, "Fans want to feel it." Then it was, "Fans want to own it." Now it's, "Why own when I can save?"

One of the unforeseen impacts of the global economic downturn on the music industry is the accelerated rate of consumers' adoption of streaming music. Want to save some money while you sit at home looking for a job? Stream. Want to listen to music on your phone while you take care of the kids? Stream. Do you happen to have your iPhone in your car? Stream. Why download when you can stream almost anything you want at any time, in any place?

As streaming becomes more portable, interactive and affordable to the consumer, fans are rapidly shifting their listening habits to embrace this medium that provides instant gratification. And this means trouble for the already wounded music industry.

Labels, particularly independent labels, have lived off of cash flow for many years now. That's why advances have always been the name of the game—money is paid upfront and there is a reasonable expectation it will be made back later. But the rise of streaming threatens to cut off the flow and destroy that model.

Here's the issue with streaming from the perspective of a content owner: It takes 150-200 plays of a song before the content owner earns royalties on par with one download. Content owners typically get paid 70 cents per download and half a penny per stream. How long does it take the average fan to stream a song 150 times—six months? Twelve months? Longer? There's the cash-flow issue. Money that we were expecting today, we now won't see for six to 12 months, maybe longer in some cases. This means, as a label or an artist, I won't have money today to finance my new record. Many labels also won't recoup their advances as quickly and therefore won't have the cash to fund or market new projects. Their cost of capital will rise and bonus pools (yes, these still exist) will evaporate. So where do we go from here?

Maybe the answer lies within the "problem," as is often the case. Maybe the industry simply needs to unlock the value of this new music experience by embracing the streaming app as its new shiny disc. The value of music has never changed, only the value of the experience. CDs offered a more portable, interactive and consumer-friendly way of delivering music in much the same way that streaming apps do now. I can stream all the music I want from the jukebox in the sky to my phone, computer or car. That's value, and people will pay for portability, interactivity and ease of use.

But you have to make it as easy for me to enjoy this experience as you made listening to a CD. Consumers might pay for a streaming app service if they believed it would be around in a year and not driven into bankruptcy. They might pay if all the music they wanted was there without restrictions and without the risk of being pulled over some inane licensing dispute. I don't think most consumers believe that a download is 150 times more valuable than a stream, so maybe we need to look at reducing the pricing spread between these two consumption mediums.

It's too bad that the industry continues to stumble over itself when setting up these new models by making the entire content licensing process overly time-consuming and costly. Want to know why the iTunes App Store is so popular and has already reached 2 billion downloads? It is available in 77 countries one year after launch. By comparison, the music store is only in 22 countries more than six years after launch, resulting in plenty of money being left on the table. The restrictive nature of content licensing might make sense in the old paradigm but not the current dynamic, global, on-demand media marketplace. Unfortunately, the music industry is likely going to have to go through a lot more pain before enough friction is removed—and by friction I mean people and systems—and common sense proposals become reality.

Having been involved in the digital music industry since 2001, I am realistic about what may likely transpire. As such, I am having conversations with our clients now about preparing for this cash-flow issue. Artists and labels need to be prepared to significantly reduce fixed operational and administrative costs. They need to effectively manage marketing budgets. They need to leverage the efficiencies of the digital marketplace to generate new sources of income and expand the opportunities for their music. The global music industry will need to come together like never before to work through this latest transformation and emerge a leaner and more vibrant industry. ••••

MEA MAXIMA CULPA

Through the years Billboard has chronicled the countless times that a performance on the Grammy Awards telecast has boosted an artist's sales and buzz. But due to an oversight, Billboard neglected to include the Grammys telecast in our annual Maximum Exposure survey and the subsequent issue (Sept. 26). The telecast provides considerable exposure that leads to significant sales boosts. For example, U.S. sales of 2009 best new artist winner Adele's album, "19," surged 218% to 57,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan, while sales of M.I.A.'s album "Kala"—which included record of the year nominee "Paper Planes"—jumped 43% to 6,000. Billboard regrets the oversight and hopes our invite to next year's festivities will not be lost in the mail.

>>>NIELSEN: WOMEN USE MUSIC SITES MORE THAN MEN

Women are more likely to visit music news or music-listening Web sites than men, according to Nielsen NetView. In August, women made up 56.1% of the Web traffic to online music sites. Overall, music sites pulled in 42.5 million unique female visitors in August. Females aged 35-49 make up the largest group. More than 14.5 million women within that demographic visited online music sites in August.

>>>WMG REDUCES STAFF

Warner Music Group has made staff reductions at Warner Bros. Records and its distribution divisions WEA and the Alternative Distribution Alliance, according to online reports. The cuts follow a reduction at Rhino Entertainment, which trimmed about 20% of its staff because of declining physical sales, sources confirm. In total, some 30-40 staffers were cut. Among those let go at Warner Bros. was senior sales VP Dave Stein, according to sources.

>>>FURTHER CUTS AT WW1

Westwood One, already reeling from financial difficulties, instituted further cost reductions to lower operating expenses. The plan calls for a one-week furlough (no work, no pay for five days) and salary cuts equal to five days spread throughout 10 weeks. In total, employees will be faced with 10 unpaid days. The cuts are on top of recent salary reductions between 5% and 15%, as well as a number of reorganization moves.

Jackson And Beatles Bring 'Help'—And Hope—To Retail

Third-Quarter Sales Show 11% Decline From 2008, Better Than Year As A Whole

Renewed interest in the Beatles and Michael Jackson slowed the decline of U.S. album sales in the third quarter, which was down 11.1% compared with the same period in 2008, according to Nielsen SoundScan. In the three months ending Sept. 27, 82.1 million albums were sold, down from 93.2 million during the third quarter of last year.

Music retailers are hoping that the continued performance of Jackson and Beatles albums and a strong fourth-quarter release schedule will continue to make up lost ground. So far album sales are down 13.9% this year. After the second quarter, sales were down 14.7% compared with the first half of 2008.

During the quarter, Jackson's June 25 death fueled about 5 million in album sales, and the Sept. 9 rerelease of the Beatles catalog has sold another 1.3 million units so far.

Digital track sales grew 11.1% to 884.2 million downloads from 795.8 million downloads in the first nine months of 2008. When those downloads are converted to track-equivalent albums (also known as TEA) the overall album category declined 8.6% to 345 million in the first nine months of this year, versus the 377.4 million recorded in the nine-month period of the prior year. That's larger than the 5.3% decline 2008 recorded from the 2007 period when albums with TEA totaled 398.6 million units.

So far this year 11 albums have topped the 1 million-unit mark, the same number as in 2008. In 2008, the top seller was Lil Wayne's "Tha Carter III," at 2.5 million units; this year's top seller is Jackson's "Number Ones," at 1.8 million units.

On the album side, 27 sets have sold more than 100,000 copies each as digital downloads, led by Kings of Leon's "Only by the Night," which has scanned about 350,000 units so far this year. Last year at this point, only 18 albums had topped the 100,000 mark, but the No. 1 digital album seller was Coldplay's "Viva La Vida or Death and All His Friends," with 548,000 downloads.

So far this year 53 digital songs have topped the 1 million-unit mark, and 14 have sold more than 2 million copies, led by the Black Eyed Peas' "Boom Boom Pow," which has been downloaded 4.2 million times. That compares with 39 digital songs that topped the million-unit mark last year, of which 11 scanned more than 2 million units each.

Universal Music Group still leads the industry in market share with a 30.6% slice of the pie for U.S. album sales, including TEA. That outpaces the 27.2% share carved out by Sony Music Entertainment. But UMG's slice is down from the 31.9% it garnered in the first nine months of last year.

UMG also leads the industry in single-track downloads with a 33% market share this year, outpacing the 24.4% share of Sony Music Entertainment. That showing helps UMG keep its commanding industry lead. But by the old industry barometer of pure U.S. album sales, Sony Music Entertainment is closing in on the leader, with a 27.8% slice of the pie, versus UMG's 29.9% share. Last year, at the end of the third quarter, there was nearly an eight percentage point spread between the two competitors, with UMG leading with 32% market share to Sony's 24.1%.

The narrowing of the gap comes largely from the burst in Jackson album sales, as well as a relatively soft third quarter for UMG. During this period, UMG sold 22.8 million units, compared with 31.4 million units in the same part of 2008. That means UMG's drop in album sales accounted for slightly more than three-quarters of the industry's 11.1 million-unit decline for the third quarter.

In terms of genre sales, the small categories of electronica and new age were the only ones to post gains—rising 2.6% to 6.6 million units and 0.5% to 1.3 million units, respectively. Of the larger genres, country showed the smallest decline, a 1.7% drop to 30.3 million units from 30.8 million units in the corresponding period last year. Likewise, Christian experienced a small decline of 6.4% to 17.6 million units from 18.8 million units for the first nine months of last year.

Rock and R&B (which includes rap) also declined slower than the industry as a whole. Rock sales dropped 11.5% to 88.1 million units, down from 99.6 million units in the same time frame of 2008. R&B fell 6.6% to 51.4 million units from 55 million units. Latin is suffering the worst this year, declining 35.1% from 19.4 million units to 12.6 million.

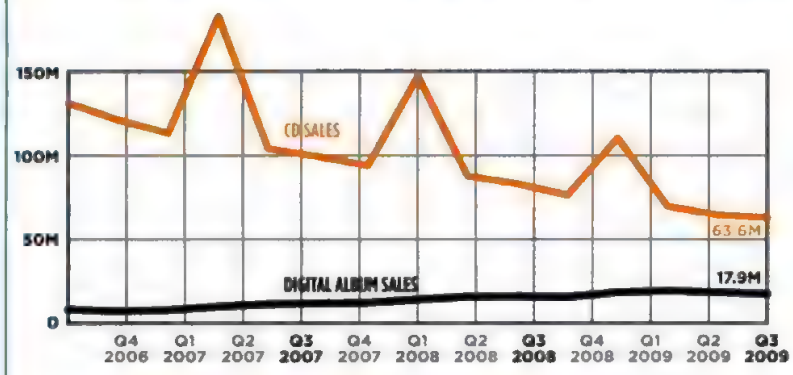
>>>YOUTUBE, WMG AGREE ON NEW DEAL

YouTube and Warner Music Group announced a new content-licensing deal that will bring the label's content back to the video streaming service after a nine-month absence. The main difference of the new deal is that WMG will now sell advertising around its videos rather than YouTube. This will allow the label to set its own prices as well as keep the majority of the resultant ad revenue.

>>>WOLFGANG'S VAULT OPENS CATALOG

Wolfgang's Vault, which has amassed the largest collection of licensed live recordings for streaming on the Internet, is about to make a treasure trove of those concerts available for download. Beginning Nov. 3, the site will add more than 1,000 titles from 919 artists to the approximately 500 that are currently available for purchase from the site's Concert Vault section. The additions will include more than 160 Grateful Dead concerts as well as titles from acts like Santana, Janis Joplin, Aretha Franklin and many others.

>>>DIDDY SIGNS WITH INTERSCOPE



Sean "Diddy" Combs has signed with Interscope Geffen A&M in a deal that includes his future albums and creates a new joint venture with Combs' Bad Boy label. The venture's first release will be Combs' own upcoming album, "Last Train to Paris." Financial terms and the time span of the deal weren't disclosed. Previously, Combs and Warner Music Group's Atlantic label had a deal that lasted almost five years.

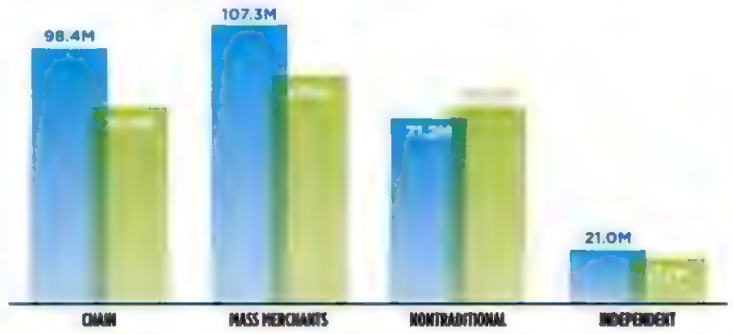
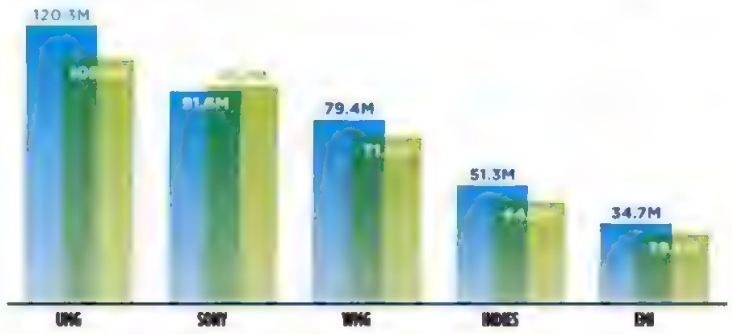
DRAWING THE QUARTER

A Look At The Last Nine Months' Worth Of Music Business Sales Numbers



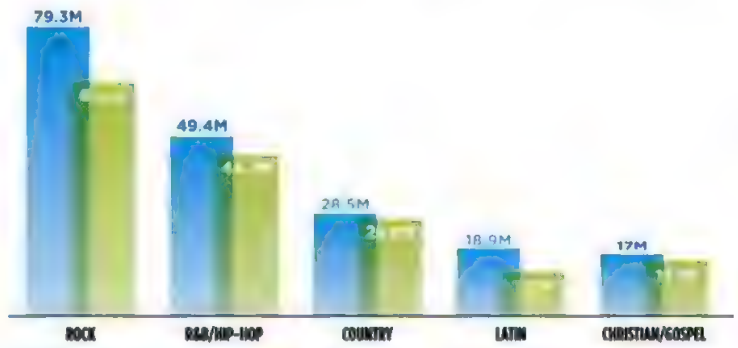
CD ALBUM SALES VS. DIGITAL ALBUM SALES

Michael Jackson and the Beatles have sold about 6 million CDs in the third quarter between them, but the format's weekly sales continue to drop from an average of 5.2 million units per week in the first half of 2009 to a third-quarter average of 4.9 million units per week.



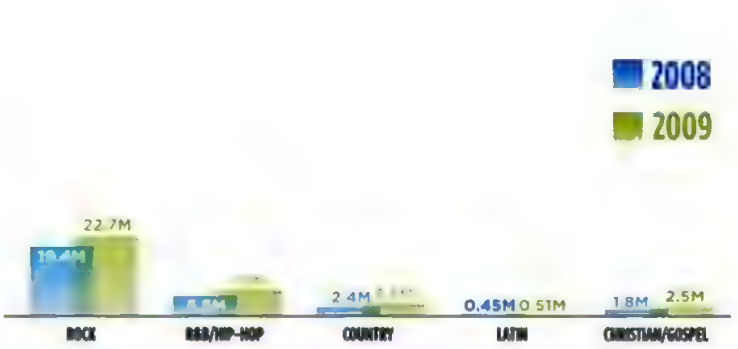
MARKET SHARE BY DISTRIBUTOR BASED ON ALBUM AND TEA (TRACK-EQUIVALENT ALBUM) SALES

Among the major labels, Sony Music Entertainment was the only distributor to gain market share over the prior year. While the indie sector lost market share, the above numbers don't reflect sales by major-owned indie distributors, which are counted within their respective parents.



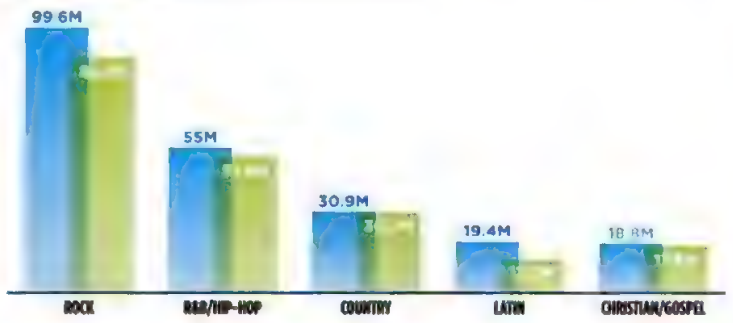
ALBUM SALES BY STORE TYPE

For the first time, the nontraditional retail sector—which consists of digital stores like iTunes, online CD stores like Amazon, concert sales, mail-order houses and non-music stores like Starbucks—has surpassed the chain category in overall album sales and is now the second-largest category behind mass merchants.



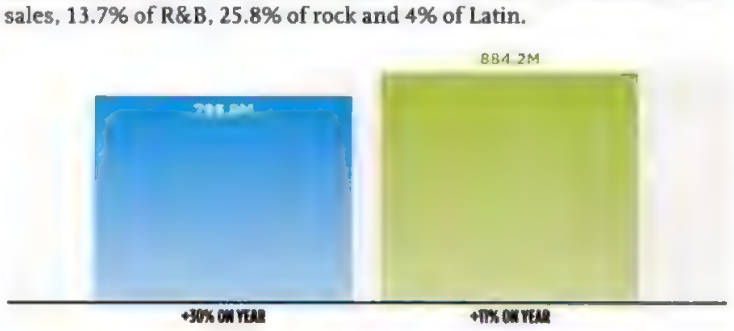
ALBUMS PLUS TEA SOLD BY DISTRIBUTOR

Sony's market-share gain translated into an album sales gain—a rarity these days. Universal's sales declined by nearly 15 million units, although EMI suffered the largest decline on a percentage basis, at 13.7%.



CD ALBUM SALES BY GENRE

The electronica/dance genre was the only category to post an increase, up 2.2% in unit sales compared with the corresponding period last year. Latin had the largest decline, with a 36.2% drop.



DIGITAL ALBUM SALES BY GENRE

Of the larger genres, country and Christian had the biggest percentage gain in unit sales, with the former up 50% and the latter up 39%. Digital accounts for 18.8% of country album sales, 14.1% of Christian's unit sales, 13.7% of R&B, 25.8% of rock and 4% of Latin.

TOTAL ALBUM SALES BY GENRE

Latin album sales continue to plummet, displacing rap as the genre hardest hit by declines. Latin is suffering shrinking space for CDs at traditional music chains, as well as the 2008 demise of Handleman, a respected rack-jobber that supplied albums to Best Buy and one-third of Wal-Mart stores.

DIGITAL TRACK SALES

As expected, the percentage of increase in digital sales has slowed as unit sales continue to grow. But this year the growth in unit sales was more modest than it was the previous year. Digital sales only grew 88.4 million units compared with the prior year-to-year growth of 183.6 million.

Canvasback Music Strikes A New Deal With Atlantic

Former Columbia Records imprint Canvasback Music—best-known for releasing in 2007 the soundtrack to the Academy Award-winning film "Once," which featured music from the Swell Season—has signed a multiyear, worldwide label services and distribution deal with Atlantic Records. Under the partnership, artists signed to Canvasback/Atlantic will have access to label resources under the Warner Music Group (WMG) banner and receive distribution through WEA and Warner Music International.

The first release on Canvasback/Atlantic will be the debut from the London-based rock band

Fanfarlo, whose new album, "Reservoir," will be released Oct. 13 in the United States.

As part of the joint venture, Atlantic will house Canvasback founder/A&R veteran Steve Ralbovsky's management company Beekeeper Artists, whose roster includes singer/songwriter Rachael Yamagata and producer Scott Litt. The partnership went into effect at the beginning of September; financial terms weren't disclosed. Canvasback and Beekeeper Artists are headquartered at Atlantic's New York offices.

"Steve Ralbovsky is without question one of the absolute best in the business," Atlantic chairman/CEO Craig Kallman says. "The opportunity to bring Steve into the Atlantic fold was a dream come true. He's the consummate record man in every way, shape and form. His track record speaks for itself."

With more than 25 years of experience working for labels like A&M, Elektra, Arista, Interscope, Columbia and RCA, Ralbovsky is responsible for signing acts including Soundgarden, Kings of Leon, My Morning Jacket and the Strokes. He began his career in tour and artist management, then later landed his first A&R role in 1983 at EMI Records. A year later Ralbovsky moved to Columbia, where he signed T Bone Burnett, Matthew Sweet and the Outfield. Other noteworthy signings during his various label stints include Nanci Griffith, Ween, Anthrax, the Breeders, David Gray and Ray LaMontagne.

In 2006, Ralbovsky left an executive A&R role at RCA to again join Columbia, where he oversaw Canvasback while also providing A&R direction for select artists and projects on the label's roster. "It was a label imprint and a developing management partnership," Ralbovsky says. "We created a model whereby we'd use independent operations as well as in-house label services."

The most successful release on Canvasback under its deal with Columbia was "Once," which has sold 719,000 copies in the United States, according to Nielsen SoundScan. Other releases on the imprint included albums by Manchester Orchestra, Annuals and Wild Sweet Orange.

Canvasback's partnership with Columbia ended in May, according to Ralbovsky, who adds that senior management at WMG expressed interest in the label earlier this year. "It was a difficult and challenging decision to make, but for a variety of reasons I felt this would be the best for my colleagues and myself," he says. "It felt like a good move to make."

Ralbovsky expects that most label services (publicity, marketing, promotion, new media, touring) for future Canvasback album releases will be handled by Atlantic. "Initially the intention is to keep it more in-house, because from our point of view, they've got this place populated very well with a lot of great folks," he says. "So we're looking forward to tapping into all the traditional record company departments—maybe a little more than we did in our last relationship [with Columbia]."

Atlantic will also provide services to artists signed to Beekeeper Artists, according to Kallman. "We'll give all our resources to help support the management side of [Ralbovsky's] business and Canvasback."

Ralbovsky says he hopes to expand the management company's roster in the coming months. New signings will be chosen "selectively and focused to our taste," he says. "Less is more, generally, and it has to fit to what we intuitively feel excited about."

The Canvasback/Beekeeper staff includes Jack Hedges, who is the marketing director for the label and oversees touring and finance at the management company; Dan Chertoff, who'll be responsible for A&R and Web management; and Joanna Katz, who'll manage administrative duties.

Meanwhile, Kallman says he doesn't expect Atlantic to enter any similar deals in the near future. "This was a unique opportunity because of who Steve was," he says. "There are very few executives of Steve's caliber, so I don't see many opportunities to repeat this. But obviously wherever there is someone at this level, we'd love to be doing a deal like this." ••••

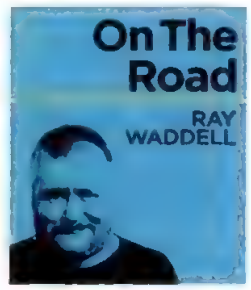
'Eyes' On The Prize



Paramore Steps Up After Its No Doubt Supporting Slot

This is how artist development is done: digital marketing, label promotion and strategic touring—lots of touring.

Paramore began a headlining tour Sept. 29 at the Fox Theatre in Pomona, Calif.—following an appearance on "The Tonight Show With Conan O'Brien"—the first stop of a mini-tour of "under-plays" that is the latest carefully planned touring move in a career that has made the most of its live opportunities.

The fall North American run consists of about 18 shows in small to midsize venues, w[illegible]g Nov. 1 at Nashville's sold-out Ryman Auditorium, not far from the band's hometown of Franklin, Tenn. The fall tour is 80%-90% sold out "and has been for weeks," according to Ken Fermaglich, the band's agent at the Agency Group.

TAG represents Paramore worldwide, with Fermaglich and agent David Galea out of the New York office and TAG U.K. director Geoff Meall in London. Mark Mercado manages the band.

This tour follows a big summer opening for No Doubt's amphitheater tour. Paramore's new album "Brand New Eyes" came out Sept. 29. "This is a short little go-round in the States just to get a look-see with the new record and the band touring as headliner on this record," Fermaglich says.

The supporting slot with No Doubt exposed the band to new fans, allowed it to showcase its music to the right demographic and was priced to allow existing fans to come out en masse. The No Doubt reunion tour averaged 15,000-20,000 per night, fueled by a $10 lawn promotion put together by promoter Live Nation and No Doubt manager Jim Guerinot.

Fermaglich says the promotion gave Paramore fans who may not have wanted to spend $75-$85 on a pavilion seat an opportunity to support the band. "The Paramore consumer is not used to spending $75 to see Paramore—they're used to paying mid-$20," Fermaglich says. "The marketing and promotion of the tour was amazing, the demo was right, so the takeaway was a perfect setup for the new album and the next tour."

Basically, the No Doubt slot did what a supporting slot is supposed to do: "I don't know that we want to do a lot more supporting—nor do I think we need to at this point—but in between albums, to get the remaining parts of the machine going to set up this record, it was the perfect concept," Fermaglich says.

Paramore will take most of November off, then begin a U.K./European run that starts at the end of November in Helsinki and runs until Dec. 19. Fermaglich says the Euro shows are strong, but the United Kingdom is "massive."

"We sold out Wembley Arena in one day; we'll sell about 14,000 tickets in Manchester," he says. "We started with a three-quarter [arena] setup, now we're going to full capacity in every one of the arenas we play."

The demand in the United Kingdom positions Paramore as an international headliner. Paramore will play dates on Australia's Soundwave festival beginning the third week in February, along with some other headlining shows booked around that tour. It's starting to confirm other Pacific Rim territories as well.

For next spring the band is discussing a headlining tour of secondary and tertiary college markets, mostly 4,000- to 6,000-capacity venues. Then it's back to Europe in June for festival dates. The rest of the summer is being discussed. "We'll work in the summer in the U.S., but we don't know in what scenario," Fermaglich says. "We have to see what happens with the record to get a better sense of what we're dealing with."

Paramore's touring is strategic and well-scripted, with the flexibility to react quickly to take advantage of opportunities. "It's conservative with the intention of trying to sell out as much as possible, leave no meat on the bone and trying to set up for the next tour," Fermaglich says. "During the No Doubt tour on an off day in August, we did a walk-on at the Warped tour. We really want to continue to have that association with both [Vans Warped producer] Kevin Lyman and that tour because it was so instrumental in the development of this band."

In short, Paramore seems poised for yet another major breakthrough. "You can feel that we have it teed up," Fermaglich says. "We have an amazing band that is really intelligent about their decisions and how to do this and understands what's necessary to do this." ....

with MARCELLA ARAICA

by MARIEL CONCEPCION

Seven years ago, when she first got her start in the male-dominated world of music engineering, Marcella Araica says it was common for musicians to come to her studio and not realize she'd be the one behind the board. But now, her reputation precedes her. Araica—one of two female engineers in R&B/hip-hop, along with Alicia Keys' engineer Ann Mincieli—has worked on songs by Britney Spears ("Gimme More"), Usher ("Love In This Club"), Keri Hilson ("Knock You Down"), Nelly Furtado ("Promiscuous") and Madonna ("4 Minutes"), among many others.

Araica's big break came two months after starting a job as a general assistant at Miami's Hit Factory studio. Although she had only recently graduated from a production and recording program in her hometown of Orlando, Fla., she was asked to work a session with singer/rapper/producer Missy Elliott. From there, Araica, also known as Ms. Lago, built a relationship with Timbaland and launched her career.

1 Women aren't usually encouraged to enter engineering. How did you get your start?

When I was 20 years old, I was introduced to a school that offered classes in audio programming, and I loved the program. Four months in, I researched studios I was interested in working in and eventually put in a call to Miami's Hit Factory. There were no positions then, but a week before graduation, I called and they told me there was an opening.

2 Most people know broadly what an engineer does, but can you explain the specific roles each type of engineer plays? And which do you enjoy the most?

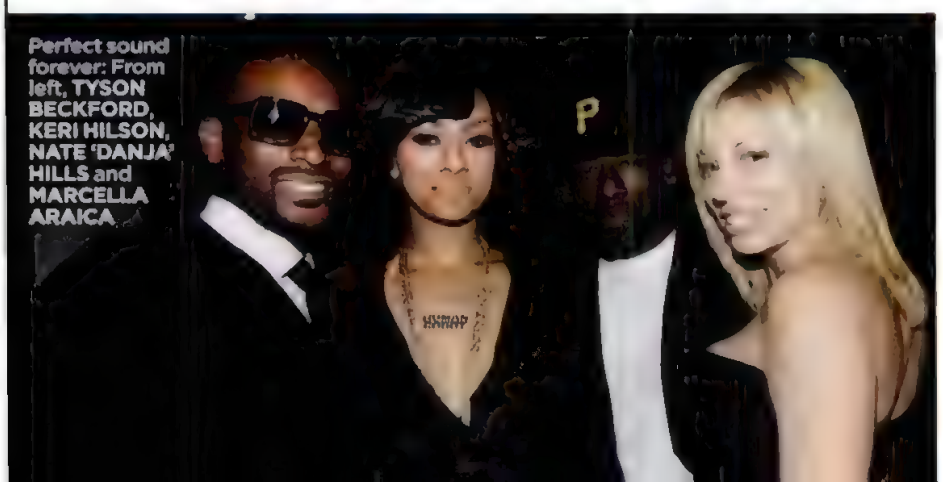
The engineer is the person that captures the sound or mixes it down to a balanced level, the recording engineer records the artists or the producer, and the mixer takes all of that and makes sense of it. That's what I enjoy doing the most—mixing. You get the vocals that are not exactly recorded right and instrumentation that isn't really good, and you have to beef up and clarify the sound to make it all it could be.

3 How does it feel to be one of the only females in the field?

There's only one other female engineer who I know of. It feels amazing to be doing this, though. As a woman in this business, I want to be able to open doors for other women that want to get into this and show them that they can do anything they want.

4 How did you meet Missy Elliott, Timbaland and hip-hop producer Nate "Danja" Hills?

Two months after being in the program, the studio manager asked me if I would work a session with Missy. I was really nervous, but I knew it was an opportunity I couldn't pass up. To my luck, she ended up loving me and asked for me to be in her sessions all the time moving forward. Through her I met Timbaland; his engineer Jimmy Douglas, who is well-known in the field; and then a year later I met Danja.



5 How did you wind up going into business with Hills?

We launched our own independent label last year called New Revolution of Stars. Our first act is a singer/songwriter out of Florida named Kevin Cossom. Our mission is to sign artists with real, genuine talent—acts that cover all grounds.

I met Danja about six years ago, and at first we didn't mesh well. But later I found out we basically shared the same goals and dreams. So we began working together and chiseling our crafts together. With the exception of one album, I've worked on every record he's done since.

6 You're also branching off into songwriting. How's that going for you?

That comes with me being in the studio and being able to vibe with producers and artists. For me, it comes from a production side, not a lyrical aspect. But my goal is to be on the lyrical end of things. So far though, my stuff is very personal and organic because I'm trying to tell stories and really don't know how to follow a format yet. It will happen in the future though; I know it will, but I'm not in a rush.

CANADA UNITED

Indies Link For U.S. Releases

TORONTO—Several Canadian indie labels have formed a new label services company, Rock Steady, which aims to help global independent artists crack the American market.

The brainchild of Toronto-based Last Gang Records founder Chris Taylor, Rock Steady is headquartered in Los Angeles and offers marketing, PR, sales and radio promotion services under one roof, although labels need their own U.S. distribution. The other partners in the company are Hamilton, Ontario-based Sonic Unyon Records and Toronto-based labels Dine Alone Records, Paper Bag Records and Underground Operations.

"Label services is the future," says Last Gang VP Trevor Guy, who helped set up Rock Steady. "For any one of the partners, the costs of setting up on their own would be prohibitive. But partnering allows us to make that work."

The Ontario Media Development Corp. (OMDC)—a provincial government agency that supports Ontario's cultural and artistic businesses—provided initial funding of $301,000 Canadian ($275,000). The five labels contributed a total of $100,000 Canadian ($91,000), with Last Gang—home to Crystal Castles and Metric—serving as the primary partner, although it's not in a controlling position.

Rock Steady employs four staffers including GM Adam Hobbs, who was previously artist relations/product manager for the slotMusic project at flash memory company SanDisk. It underwent a soft launch in August and is working current releases from the five partners, including Silver Starling's self-titled debut (Last Gang) and the Ghost Is Dancing's "Battles On" (Sonic Unyon).

Previously, Dine Alone—home to bands including Alexisonfire and Bedouin Soundclash—would either sign bands for Canada only or license its albums to U.S. labels, according to founder Joel Carriere. But now the label can enter the U.S. market in its own right.

"It gives us a much stronger presence in America and really boosts our prospects," he says.

Hobbs says that in addition to traditional marketing and promotion, the company is working on a number of innovative deals, including one with a major U.S. hotel chain that would feature Last Gang acts in in-room promotions.

Rock Steady also hopes to sign up labels from outside North America. The European indie PIAS Recordings will work select releases through Rock Steady, including French electronica artist Vitalic's "Flashmob" album.

Vitalic is "a great example of an act we've released in Europe who has great buzz" but needs help to make an impact in America, says PIAS Entertainment Group's U.S. representative Francois Moret. "The small, flexible dynamic at Rock Steady is really appealing to us."

PIAS previously used label services company World's Fair, which shuttered in August, for its U.S. releases—and not everyone is sure Rock Steady will succeed where World's Fair failed. Grant Dexter, chief executive of Canada's MapleCore music group, which operates MapleMusic Recordings, says he considered partnering on the project before backing away.

"It is a great idea," he says, "but I also feel it is basically unsustainable without more government funding," citing the high cost of covering the U.S. market.

Taylor says Rock Steady can apply for more OMDC money if necessary, but he's confident it won't have to.

"We've had people approaching us before we had computers and desks," he says. "I don't think generating the business we want is going to be the issue."

And Hobbs says lower-cost services—rates start at $1,000 per month for a single service—will give Rock Steady wide appeal.

"We're super-sensitive to the times and the fact labels and artists aren't spending money like they used to," he says. "But we have a suite of services that can be taken advantage of—some of which they won't even know were out there." ••••

A KIND OF MAGIC

Merlin Targets New Digital Deals

LONDON—Merlin insists that it can still cast its spell over the digital music market, despite a slow start for the independent digital rights licensing operation.

Unveiled at MIDEM in January 2007, the indie label organization anticipated striking multiple deals with digital music services as a virtual "fifth major." But as of the fourth quarter, the digital rights licensing operation has inked only four agreements: with Sweden-based streaming service Spotify, U.S. music subscription service iMesh, Irish music video Web site Muzu.tv and Catch Media, whose Play Anywhere service allows users to store their music collection online. Merlin now has 6,000 label members from 25 countries and claims a catalog of more than 1.5 million tracks and videos.

Still, CEO Charles Caldas insists Merlin remains "on track," promising a batch of new deals before year's end.

"We're in negotiations with Virgin Media, we continue talking to MySpace Music," he says. "There are five or six things we're working on."

Merlin has been at loggerheads with MySpace Music over the majors' equity stakes in the service since its September 2008 launch (Billboard, Oct. 4, 2008).

Caldas declines to reveal Merlin's revenue to date, saying it "includes a lot of payments from deals we can't discuss publicly." He describes much of Merlin's work as "the 'dark side,' chasing down infringing services—we have benefits [from settlements] flowing through to our members on that level."

Although Caldas declines to confirm it, Merlin member Martin Goldschmidt, managing director of the U.K. indie Cooking Vinyl, says the organization recently settled a long-running dispute with the U.K. Internet radio/streaming service Last.fm (Billboard.biz, July 10, 2008).

Analyst Mark Mulligan of Forrester Research believes Merlin's lack of deals reflects the global economic situation during the past 12-18 months.

"With the credit markets so fragile," Mulligan says, "it's much more difficult to raise the capital that new services need to get to market."

Caldas dismisses talk of underachievement—"Nobody should underestimate the scale and complexity of what we've built," he says—but even some Merlin members admit progress has been slow.

"Merlin has underperformed to date," Goldschmidt says. "It was much, much harder to set up than people thought it would be."

Goldschmidt says Cooking Vinyl and its sister distributor Essential have yet to see money from Merlin but insists it's making a difference. "Without Merlin," he says, "indies have a simple choice: Either take a crap deal or don't participate."

Merlin struck its first licensing deal in October 2008 with Spotify, where a spokesman says Merlin members "account for over 10% of usage" across the six European countries in which it operates.

Caldas says that number "is a tangible, quantifiable testament to the value of what we represent."

London-based Steve Purdham, CEO of the U.K. streaming service We7, also says that Merlin is effective.

"For people like Spotify," he says, "it's been very easy to come along and go to a single point of contact."

We7 doesn't have a deal with Merlin, having begun operations in mid-2007. When Merlin fully launched in April 2008, Purdham says We7 "already had the vast majority of what was required. Had We7 been starting now, would Merlin have been a help to us? Absolutely, yes."

Caldas is confident about future progress. "Consumers are not stupid," he says, "and will gravitate to where the choice is best—a service without the key repertoire we represent would not be a particularly attractive one."

Going forward, Caldas says Merlin is focused on identifying "next-generation music services and hopefully the next Spotify." However, he adds: "It's disappointing that there are still services who are backward-looking or just misinformed as to how they value independent repertoire." ••••

WEA PRESIDENT/ CEO

Mike Jbara

WEA's chief on executing the company's physical and digital sales strategies.

Though WEA president/CEO Mike Jbara is the newest head of a major-label distributor, he has been running the company's day-to-day operations since 2005. Jbara worked under and is succeeding John Esposito, who now heads Warner Music Nashville, as WEA executive VP/COO for the past four years. As such, he is well-versed in the company's capabilities as well as the challenges that the ever-changing business environment present to distribution companies charged with handling physical and digital product flow.

After joining WEA in 1996 as VP of production operations, Jbara added studio services to his duties in 2001. In that capacity, Jbara was instrumental in the creation of WEA's online music and in-house studio operations, which perform audio preparation, digital mastering and content quality control for the digital supply chain.

In 2003, he began overseeing WEA's entire U.S. production and global digital operations, first as VP, and then senior VP of production and media operations, until becoming executive VP/COO. Before joining WEA, Jbara, who holds a bachelor's degree in engineering from the University of Michigan, started the New York-based Media and Entertainment Practice at Andersen Consulting and served as a senior manager from 1987 to 1995. In that role, Jbara launched a number of client projects across consumer and industrial product industries.

Will there be any changes at WEA?

One of the benefits of having been with [John Esposito] for a bit, and frankly being one of the people he attracted to this place, is to make sure that all of the good stuff he laid down remains, in terms of really being a creative, positive, exciting place for the employees of the group. WEA has to continue to be a company that evolves as the requirements for our services change from our labels. The profile of the WEA employee continues to evolve —a technology background is a more common attribute of the employees walking around the halls— and I feel very comfortable of the new mix of talent we have here.

What is WEA structured like nowadays?

We continue to be responsible for account management in physical and in our digital business, and we are responsible for the global supply chain, which is the asset management and fulfillment piece, for the music group now as well. In the last 18 months, we also have taken on the responsibility for the operations and sales part of the apparel and merch business led by Matt Young; also what we call the interactive marketing group, which includes everything from some shared Web services like search optimization and analytics; all the way to our commerce operations and retail support operation; and our direct-to-consumer business.

We are taking what has been the traditional role of WEA being a shared service for our labels and applied that thinking to the new businesses that we are in.

How is WEA meeting the challenges of digital distribution while overseeing the decline of physical?

We have always been very attentive to our physical business. But since Warner Music Group (WMG) is perceived as so digital-centric, there was a negative perception, perhaps, with our physical. We believe that learning from our digital business makes us more creative and perhaps even more objective about where we want our physical business to go. Those two businesses inside of our building are so well-integrated that we don't draw a distinction, and we feel like our physical business is better as a result of us taking an early position in digital.

WEA is one of the most active and vocal members of the new formats committee of NARM, which WEA co-chairs with Amazon, where the talk as a group is totally media-agnostic. We are not just bullish but aggressively in search of great physical offerings as well as digital offerings.

Did Michael Jackson's sales in the wake of his death change the perception of physical within the industry?

Inside of our building, not really, but if it [gets] both analysts and consumers to take another look at physical retail as a place to go for music, we love that.

With music sales in decline, albums have a shorter life span than ever. How do you try to counter that?

Our thoughts about developing artists starts earlier than it ever has before and it certainly doesn't end from our perspective. An album is a milestone; it is not the beginning or the end of any particular effort that is going on inside the music group right now.

There is a lot more planning because there are a lot more channels. We want to be thoughtful about our artists' time commitment and about the best places to put their assets—their music and video—with the number of different choices in front of us. We have a lot of busy beavers inside of our labels; product managers who are evolving rapidly and becoming more like brand managers. When we find ourselves stepping into areas that are important to our artists but are not necessarily core skills of the legacy music people, we go and hire experts and we partner them with the creative talent at the labels to make sure that we are as effective as we can be.

How hard is it to break developing artists now as opposed to three years ago?

We are planning for a long-term relationship with that artist. It could be four or five years before we see any fruit from an artist investment. And that's the long-term focus that [WMG CEO Edgar Bronfman Jr. and chairman/CEO of recorded music Lyor Cohen] have brought to this organization. They certainly have developed a culture that encourages employees to stay focused on the goal of developing artists for lasting careers.

That's what you bring to the table, but my question was referring to traditional sales drivers that have lost their luster and how WEA offsets that.

We are probably better than we have been in some time in supporting artists that are not on the radio. We are very good at finding the market, the consumer, the fan and the channel for those artists. So we have become much better at being targeted as a distributor; being incredibly nimble with physical inventory as well as being able to respond on the physical side with marketing and messaging and talking to that fan base in a way that we have not in the past.

On the other side of the coin, as digital track sales grow, catalog album sales are growing to a larger overall percentage of U.S. album sales, versus current albums. So far this year, catalog is 46.2% of album sales, versus 41.7% for 2008 and 38.8% for 2007. Beside the anomaly of Jackson's sales, is the trend picking up speed?

In the catalog area, there have been some effective programs around pricing and promotion this past year. WEA's data has historically shown that pricing alone, without positioning, does not move the needle. And, promotion/positioning plus price has always been effective for artist discovery whether it be with a developing artist or a classic album that might be yet unknown to a new fan.

While we have been outspoken about our desire to be very analytical about the true price elasticity of music, we always encourage our retail partners to share their individual results if it can provide new insight into their customers' behavior. We want everyone to win in this space. We believe our partners and WMG's artists win if we continue to connect convenience, content, value and price with music fans. ••••

Beyoncé Honored As Billboard's Woman Of The Year

BY GAIL MITCHELL

FANS ARE STILL getting to know Sasha Fierce, Beyoncé's musical alter ego, formally introduced on the singer's 2008 album, "I Am . . . Sasha Fierce." ¶ Most probably don't know, however, that the singer/songwriter has been friends with Fierce since elementary school. ¶ Manager and father Mathew Knowles will never forget the moment he first met Fierce. A 7-year-old Beyoncé was entered in a talent search open to Houston elementary and middle school students. The song she sang? John Lennon's "Imagine." "Beyoncé was the youngest," Knowles says. "She got up onstage and when she was finished, she received a standing ovation. Her mother [Tina Knowles] and I looked at each other and said, 'That can't be our Beyoncé. She's shy and quiet.' " ¶Twenty-two years later, that simmering brew of shy, quiet talent peppered with fierce determination and ambition is at a boiling point. The former frontwoman of Destiny's Child has come into her own, enjoying one of the best years of a still-evolving solo career. ¶ On Oct. 2, Beyoncé will add one more honor to her array of accolades when she accepts Billboard's Woman of the Year Award. The presentation will be made at Billboard's Women in Music brunch in New York, recognizing the year's top 30 women in the music business (see page 59). ¶ "Beyoncé is a multiplatinum artist and a multitalented woman who clearly embodies the qualities of excellence and achievement that the Billboard Woman of the Year Award was created to honor," Billboard editorial director Bill Werde says. "She has not only influenced pop culture with her hit songs and her signature dance moves, but has inspired women everywhere with her unique style, business savvy and dedication to charitable causes."

WOMAN OF THE YEAR

Center stage: BEYONCÉ performs July 13 at Staples Center in Los Angeles.

In the past 12 months alone, Beyoncé has accomplished several career milestones. She not only sang "American the Beautiful" during the opening ceremony of the 2009 presidential inauguration, she also sang the Etta James hit "At Last" as President Barack Obama and first lady Michelle Obama danced their first dance at the Neighborhood Inaugural Ball.

In March Beyoncé launched her worldwide I Am . . . tour, which has grossed some $53.5 million to date, according to Billboard Boxscore. She's also the star and executive producer of the 2009 film "Obsessed," which opened at No. 1 and has grossed more than $68.3 million in North America, according to Nielsen EDI.

"I Am . . . Sasha Fierce" debuted at No. 1 on the Billboard 200 when it was released by Columbia Records in November. The album, the singer's third solo set, has spun off a string of Billboard Hot 100 hits: "If I Were a Boy," "Single Ladies (Put a Ring on It)," "Halo," "Ego" and "Sweet Dreams."

After accepting MTV's video of the year award for her iconic "Single Ladies" video a few weeks ago, Beyoncé gained a new level of fan and industry respect at the Sept. 13 event when she unselfishly brought Taylor Swift back onstage to complete the acceptance speech cut off by Kanye West's surprise interruption.

Beyoncé also continued her commitment this year to ongoing philanthropic projects and entrepreneurial activities from fashion to fragrances.

"She's incredibly creative," says Rob Stringer, chairman of Sony Music Label Group. "She also works phenomenally hard to create the opportunities she has. People tend to think there's always an image-maker behind female pop stars. That's not the case with Beyoncé. There's no element of diva or difficulty about her; she takes control of the process and makes it happen. She's grown beautifully in that role."

'Other artists pretend they have control over what they do. Beyoncé really does. She's growing as an artist more rapidly than anyone thought.'

—ROB STRINGER, SONY MUSIC LABEL GROUP

Beyoncé's creative skills and hard work date back to that pivotal talent show. Born Sept. 4, 1981, in Houston, the young artist-in-training grew up listening to a variety of musical influences, including Tina Turner, Aretha Franklin, Michael Jackson, Luther Vandross and Rachelle Ferrell. She and friend LaTavia Roberson were only 9 years old when the group that led to Destiny's Child was initially established in 1990 with Mathew Knowles as manager. The duo expanded into a trio after Kelendria "Kelly" Rowland joined in 1992. A year after that, the group became a quartet with the addition of LeToya Luckett.

Throughout the course of several name changes—Girls Time, the Dolls and Cliché—the group rehearsed and played everything from luncheons and fashion shows to church gigs and Tina Knowles' hair salon. Those experiences not only honed Beyoncé's talent and work ethic, they also planted the seeds for the singer's future business acumen.

"I think we certainly played a part," Mathew Knowles says. "Tina had her own salon and there were many nights when she came home Tuesday through Saturday at 7 or 8. And I was working hard at Xerox. I think all of the girls saw that drive. They saw our successes and also our failures."

The fledgling Destiny's Child experienced its share of disappointments before grabbing the gold ring. The act competed on "Star Search" and lost. However, the exposure led to a record/production deal through Elektra Records.

The relationship with Elektra ended after two years, without a record. But things began clicking after Knowles approached an earlier suitor, Columbia Records. Destiny's Child signed with the label in 1997.

Destiny's Child scored its first No. 1 when "No, No, No"—the first single from the act's 1998 self-titled debut album—reached the pinnacle of Billboard's Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs chart.

Two follow-up singles didn't fare as well. But the stage was set for a platinum-certified future when Destiny's Child teamed with producer Kevin "She'kspere" Briggs. The result was the group's first top five pop hit and second R&B chart-topper in 1999: "Bills, Bills, Bills."

The act's second album, "The Writing's on the Wall," yielded two more hits ("Say My Name" and "Jumpin', Jumpin' "), opening the door to a storied career.

"There are moments that just stick out from working with the group in the beginning," says Lisa Ellis, former president of Sony Urban Music. "Beyoncé was always so brave and prepared to be the star she is today, even at 16 and 18 years old. She's always pushing the envelope and very competitive but with humility and kindness; the epitome of a professional and human being."

The year after "Wall" brought a lineup change as well as a turning point in Beyoncé's career. Destiny's Child now was a trio, with the departure of original members Roberson and Luckett and the addition of Michelle Williams. And the group exploded in popularity thanks to the 2000 release of its next single, "Independent Women Part I."

The song, used as the theme in the film "Charlie's Angels," spent 11 weeks at No. 1 on the Hot 100 and also marked Beyoncé's emergence as a songwriter. She added production credits to her growing résumé with the group's third album, "Survivor," released in 2001.

In 2004, the act released "Destiny Fulfilled" and, a year later, the trio disbanded, closing a significant chapter in girl-group history. To date, Destiny's Child has sold 16.9 million albums in the United States, according to Nielsen SoundScan. (Worldwide, according to Sony, Destiny's Child and Beyoncé cumulatively have sold 100 million units, including albums, physical and digital singles, and music DVDs).

During the three-year hiatus between the "Survivor" and "Fulfilled" albums, each of the members of Destiny's Child recorded solo albums.

Beyoncé's first solo set, "Dangerously in Love," arrived in 2003. Its popularity was powered by her stiletto-heeled gyrations in the video for the lead single, "Crazy in Love."

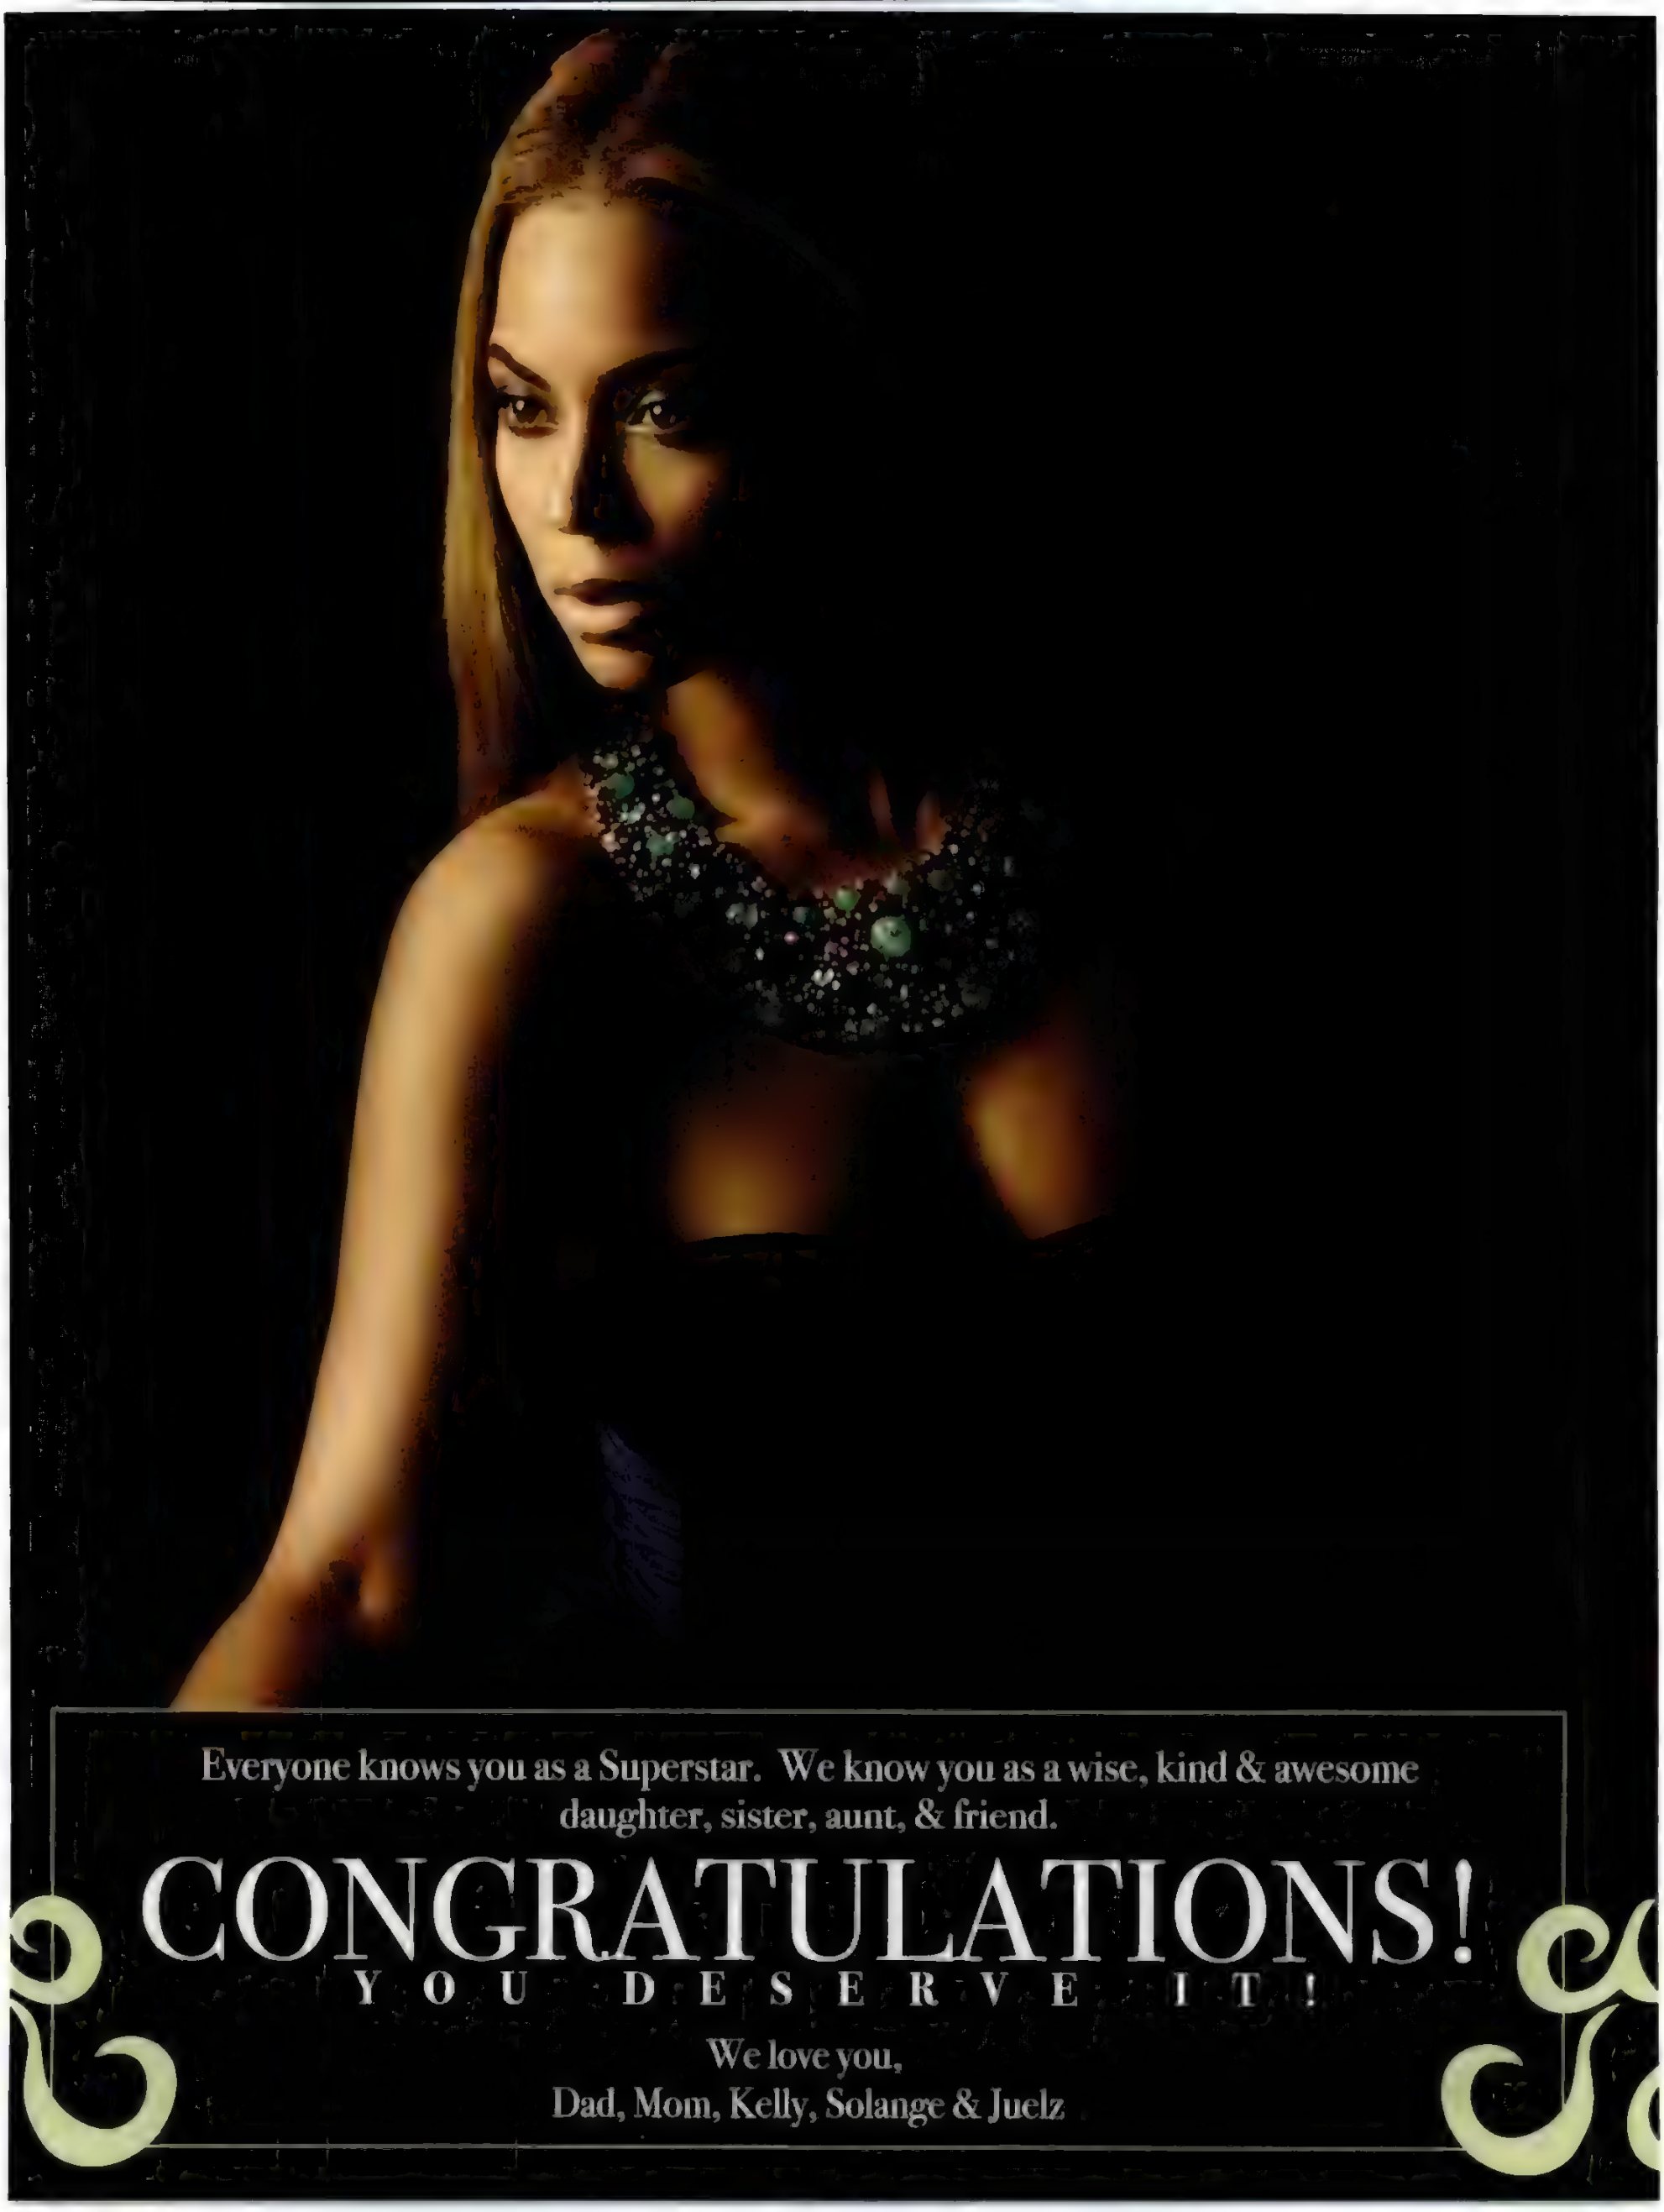
That first solo album extolled the joys of love, but the singer/songwriter's second solo release, the 2006 set "B'Day," centered on the theme of female empowerment. With her single "Irreplaceable," Beyoncé introduced into the popular lexicon the memorable phrase, "To the left, to the left," which translates to "I can find someone else. I don't have to stay in this dead-end relationship."

"I have to commend Beyoncé's vision for doing that song and including it on the record," says Mikkel S. Eriksen, one-half of the production duo Stargate. "It was a big risk because the song sounded very different from what was going on at the time and with the other material on the album. I don't think any of us knew it would be one of the biggest records of her career."

Producer Rodney Jerkins, who worked with Destiny's Child on the hit "Say My Name," witnessed Beyoncé's ability to multitask without dropping the ball while recording the "B'Day" album.

The singer had four studio rooms going simultaneously during a recording session in New York: Jerkins was in one while producers Sean Garrett and Swizz Beatz were housed in two other rooms. Beyoncé was in a fourth room cutting background vocals.

As Jerkins recalls, among the songs she was working on were "Déjà Vu," "Ring the Alarm" and "Upgrade You."



"It freaked me out," he recalls. "It wasn't the fact that she had four rooms going but that she was able to pull off the personality and emotion on each song, going from a ballad to a ghetto hood beat. Songs are like mini-movies to me, and no one can act in four movies at a time. But if you listen to those songs, you can hear the tonality and what she had to do to attack it. Not too many people can wake up and do that—and do that consistently."

"What people may not know about her is that besides being such an accomplished performer, she's a great producer," adds Big Jon Platt, president of West Coast creative for EMI Music Publishing. "She also has some of the best A&R instincts I've ever come across."

Beyoncé's creative instincts and multitasking skills provide the underpinnings for her other pursuits, including acting, business ventures and philanthropy.

She made her acting debut in the 2001 made-for-TV production "Carmen: A Hip Hopera" for MTV. That was followed in 2002 by her first feature film, co-starring as Foxxy Cleopatra opposite Mike Myers in "Austin Powers in Goldmember." Since then she's appeared in five more feature films: "The Fighting Temptations" in 2003; "The Pink Panther" in 2006, with Steve Martin; the hit musical "Dreamgirls" in 2006, with Jennifer Hudson, Jamie Foxx and Eddie Murphy; "Cadillac Records" in 2008, in the role of Etta James; and her most recent, "Obsessed," released earlier this year.

On the latter two films, Beyoncé also served as executive producer through her own company, Parkwood Films, named after the street she grew up on in Houston.

Beyoncé previously displayed her business skills in 2004 when she and her mother Tina established the production company Beyond Productions. A year later, the pair launched their first fashion collection, named House of Dereon in honor of the singer's maternal grandmother, Agnez Dereon. Since then, two other collections have been spun off: the junior lifestyle line called Dereon and the young girl's division Dereon Girls.

Beyoncé's endorsement opportunities include alliances with Pepsi and L'Oreal along with Tommy Hilfiger's True Star fragrance and Emporio Armani's Diamonds. Those fragrance forays set the stage for the development of Beyoncé's own Coty fragrance, which will be unveiled in early 2010.

Beyond the music, acting and business ventures, philanthropy is one of Beyoncé's passions.

The Survivor Foundation—formed by Beyoncé and Kelly Rowland together with the Knowles family—has donated more than $2.5 million for transitional housing for Hurricane Katrina victims and storm evacuees in the Houston area. Among the foundation's additional initiatives is the Knowles-Rowland Center for Youth in Houston.

On her current I Am . . . world tour, Beyoncé joined forces with the General Mills brand Hamburger Helper and the charity Feeding America to help deliver more than 3.5 million meals to local food banks through fan donations. The singer also devotes time to the Make a Wish Foundation, meeting and talking with children during her tour stops. She underscores her songs' female empowerment themes through her work with GEMS (Girls Educational and Mentoring Services).

Yet in all of her activities, Beyoncé is always in control, former Destiny's Child member Williams says.

"An important lesson I learned from her is how to be firm and make sure your yes means yes and your no means no," Williams says. "If she doesn't want to do it, you can't manipulate the situation with her. It's about making decisions that are right for you, that are right business-wise, that won't take you where you [don't] want to go or hurt you five or 10 years from now."

Sony's Stringer adds, "Other artists pretend they have control over what they do. Beyoncé really does. She's growing as an artist more rapidly than anyone thought."

Already a veteran at the age of 28, Beyoncé tied the record for the most Grammys won in a single year by a female artist when "Dangerously in Love" earned her five statuettes in 2004, including best contemporary R&B album and best R&B song for "Crazy in Love" featuring Jay-Z. Her "B'Day" also garnered a best contemporary R&B Grammy in 2007. That same year, Beyoncé became the first woman in the history of the American Music Awards to receive its International Artist Award.

Her 2007 concert DVD "The Beyoncé Experience Live," featuring her all-female band, has been certified three-times platinum by the RIAA.

This year, Forbes listed Beyoncé at No. 4 on its list of the 100 Most Powerful and Influential Celebrities, No. 3 on its tally of the top-grossing musicians and No. 1 on the countdown of top Best-Paid Celebrities Under 30, estimating her earnings in 2008-09 at $87 million.

Soon back on the road for the next leg of her worldwide tour, Beyoncé shows no signs of slowing down. And that will keep fans anticipating what the next creative moves will be for Beyoncé/Sasha Fierce.

And in the view of her father, what does the future hold for Beyoncé?

"I can't predict," Knowles says. "But I hope she will be enjoying the fruits of her labor with a continuing mix of music, film, corporate projects; helping others as she does now; and moving into other endeavors like maybe painting. Most people don't know this, but she's a really good painter. Family is also important to her. I see her having a long-lasting career but hopefully not working as hard as she is now."

Whatever Beyoncé does next, the one constant will be her passion.

"That's why she's able to do all of this," Knowles adds. "It's the talent, drive, determination and passion. You can't successfully develop or fulfill any strategies unless you have that." ••••

THE BILLBOARD Q&A

Beyoncé Discusses Her Focused Performances, Frenzied Pace And 'Fierce' Alter Ego BY GAIL MITCHELL

Singer. Songwriter. Philanthropist. Entrepreneur. Actress. Producer. Beyoncé may be the hardest-working woman in showbiz. ¶ Take the four days leading up to MTV's recent Video Music Awards. ¶ Beyoncé wraps a run-through of her Radio City Music Hall performance at midnight Thursday evening. Friday morning at 10 a.m., it's déjà vu as she returns to rehearsal mode. A dressing room break is anything but: chats with MTV personnel about show logistics segue into an editing session for her next project—a DVD culled from a summer stand at the Wynn Las Vegas. Later that evening, Beyoncé makes a surprise appearance at husband Jay-Z's Sept. 11 Madison Square Garden show. Then right after the VMAs, Beyoncé and her alter ego Sasha Fierce catch a flight to Australia to kick off the next leg of their I Am . . . world tour. ¶ As she ticks off her jam-packed schedule, an unfrazzled Beyoncé dismisses her multitasking with a laugh: "It's just one of those grind weeks. It will be less hectic when I'm in Australia." A world tour is less hectic? As you exhale and ponder that irony, it becomes clear that this is someone who thrives on hard work and fierce determination. Before slipping back into her signature stilettos, Billboard's 2009 Woman of the Year shares how she balances work and relaxation, feeds her philanthropic passions and envisions her future.

The average person can't keep up your pace. How do you it?

I'm an all-or-nothing type of woman. Either I'm doing absolutely nothing and relaxing—reading a book, sitting by the ocean and not answering any questions—or else I'm hands-on and giving 100%, working really hard.

I was just on vacation for three weeks after touring for a couple of months. I have to schedule time to rest, rejuvenate and get inspired to work again. Now I'm definitely rested and thank God I had the rest—that's the only way I would be able to get through a week like this. After three weeks without giving any answers or approvals and no performing, I came back like, "Yes! I'm ready to work!" [laughs]

How do you flip the switch from Beyoncé to Sasha Fierce on tour?

It's a lot easier than it used to be since I've put so many hours into performing; I can make the transition from Beyoncé to Sasha Fierce really fast. I don't have any crazy rituals beforehand. I get in maybe two-and-a-half to three hours before each show. I do my makeup on tour myself and get my hair done. Then we all come together, say a prayer and do a little stretch. I also do meet-and-greets during which I meet a lot of my fans. I usually meet children from the Make a Wish Foundation. I've basically given them an open invitation whenever anyone wants to come. That's always a highlight of the day for me.

On my days off from the tour, I do a lot of sightseeing. I love to visit churches and museums all over the world. The architecture in America is amazing but in Europe, there's so much history. I also started riding a bike on my days off with others like my assistant and stylist. It's amazing how I'm able to ride around on a bike. People kind of see it's me but since I'm on a bike, they think, "No, it's not her." And by the time they realize it's me, I'm already gone. It's great to do something normal every day. It keeps me grounded.

What do you do to maintain your tour stamina? I heard a rumor that you run on a treadmill in heels and sing.

[Laughs heartily] No, I don't run on a treadmill in heels. That's a bit extreme. But I do practice my choreography in heels. And I have a rule that when I have my heels on, everyone has to have their heels on too. Sometimes the dancers are like, "Oh, God, we hope Beyoncé comes in late," because I'll go all day. And in the end, I'll have blisters and my toes will have bruises. It's really hard sometimes. I still do all the boring things that everyone else does in regular workouts like squats and the treadmill. But I mainly get in shape from doing the choreography during those long 12-hour rehearsals for two months before a tour.

Were you surprised by the immense popularity of the "Single Ladies (Put a Ring on It)" video?

Out of all my videos, it was the least expensive and took the least amount of time. And it ended up being the most iconic. I absolutely didn't expect that—I don't think anyone did. But I knew exactly what I wanted to do: Keep it simple. I've done so many things in videos with different hair and wardrobe changes, different sets and lights. I just wanted to keep this one really minimal. And once we got on the set, it was like, "Wait a minute. This is something special."

I'd seen this 1969 video [featuring Gwen Verdon], this one take of amazing Bob Fosse choreography set against a white background. And I thought, "Wow, despite all the technology we have now, wouldn't it be great to just strip it all down—without a bunch of different camera shots and cuts, without any hair and wardrobe changes—and make it all about the performance?" We had exactly 12 hours to film that video. We did it after shooting "If I Were a Boy," so I used the same director and same crew, renting out a studio in New Jersey. From the black leotards to incorporating some of Fosse's 1969 choreography into our modern choreography, it was just a conscious effort at keeping everything simple.

Outside of music, you're committed to several charitable causes. What attracted you to these particular organizations?

I'm like everyone else. There are certain things I'm passionate about that are close to my heart. I'm so inspired by the children in Make a Wish. It gives my life a way bigger purpose when I know I can bring someone joy, especially someone in a hospital whose childhood is basically sacrificed. And their families are sacrificing too. After being in hospitals, dealing with needles, medicines and all the physical and mental pain these kids and families go through . . . for me to know that I can take them away from that is very important.

Ever since I was 9 years old, I've been working with my pastor to help the hungry and homeless. So on every tour, I've done something to help fight hunger. And this time we were able to provide 3.5 million meals—that's such a huge accomplishment. I'm grateful to work with General Mills and Hamburger Helper and be a part of something on such a large scale as Feeding America. I'm just so surprised at how many young people came to the concerts with canned goods and were concerned about this cause. They helped make this happen. It wasn't me.

Our family charity, the Survivor Foundation, is still growing. Then there's GEMS [Girls Educational and Mentoring Services]. I saw something about it on television and wanted to help. It's real important for people not to judge. That's why I sit down and talk to these ladies about what inspires me to be strong, and they inspire me as well. To talk and cry with these ladies, to hug these ladies and invite them to the shows to hear songs about empowering women to set their own standards in relationships and build self-esteem. Those are things I can share with these young women. These are all things that have something to do with my purpose in life.

And you're just as busy on the entrepreneurial side, dating back to your association with L'Oreal.

I have worked with L'Oreal since I was 18 and it continues to be a great relationship. And with the clothing line that I started with my mother [Tina Knowles], I'm still making sure the brand is true to what I like and what I think my fans will like. Making it affordable for them was very important. At my concerts, we've offered seats for $10 so that people who can't afford it can attend.

I don't realize all that I do until I do interviews like this. And then I'm like, "Oh, my God, how is this possible?" But I usually break things up and focus on one thing at a time. It is a lot and thank God I love it, because I don't know how else I would be able to do it. You just make it happen.

Something else that's about to happen is your new Coty fragrance. Can you give us a sneak preview?

I've been partners with and have endorsed different fragrances. But this is my first time developing my own fragrance. I've spent over a year having meetings, working with the perfumeries. It's been really interesting. I'd done a little of that in the past, approving a couple of things here and there. But I've been a part of this from ground zero. We've gone back and forth and back and forth over and over again to get the perfect fragrance. Everything I love, that's what this fragrance is. Fragrance makes me feel sexy, so I want my fragrance to be sexy and seductive.

My favorite color is gold and that's also being incorporated into the project. I grew up playing with my mother's perfumes and love antique bottles, so I wanted my fragrance to have this antique feeling. The bottle looks like a piece of art. I can't reveal the name yet, but it comes out early next year. I've already shot the commercial.

Have you lined up your next acting gig yet?

I did two movies last year, which was hard because I had the album and a tour. I'm on tour right now until March and I'll be going back and forth for some of the award shows. So probably next year after the tour something may happen. I've gotten a lot of scripts and out of those there are 10 that are very good. So I have to pick the one I really love.

All of the work I've put into my films has paid off because the type of scripts I'm getting now has completely changed. I've always wanted to do something darker and more dramatic because I'm much better at drama than anything else. I don't think anyone knew that until I played Etta James; people could see my range. And then I did the other movie, "Obsessed." It was so much fun, especially the fight scenes. I fell in love with doing those stunts. That was my first time ever doing anything with action in it. Eventually, I would love to do something with a little more action in it.

I'm not in a rush because acting for me is fun—something I do because I enjoy it. I don't have to do it. So I'm going to be patient and find the right film to work on next year or whenever it works out.

Is music still as much fun for you as it was in the beginning?

The truth is I really love what I do. I live for it. I've invested so much of myself in my career that I cherish it. I've worked too hard to do something to damage what I've basically dedicated my life to.

I still definitely get a high every time I get onstage. But it's not just the performing. It's also coming up with creative marketing ideas and doing cool collaborations, like my fragrance. I love everything about this.

Beyoncé's Fans

In advance of Beyoncé's appearance to receive the Woman of the Year Award at Billboard's Women in Music event Oct. 2 in New York, we invited friends, family and colleagues to offer their tributes. Several also named their favorite Beyoncé song.

"I'm definitely proud of her musical accomplishments but I'm probably more proud that she's a truly good person. My favorite song is a bonus track called 'Daddy' that appears on her first solo album. It basically says, 'Thank you for all you've given me and when I marry a man, it will be like my daddy.' "

—MATHEW KNOWLES OF MUSIC WORLD ENTERTAINMENT, BEYONCÉ'S FATHER AND MANAGER

"I'm so proud of my big sister. She's more than woman of the year; she's an inspiration."

—SOLANGE KNOWLES, SINGER/SONGWRITER

"The good news for Beyoncé is that she's not just as good as her last hit song. My admiration for everything she does is immense. Behind her inspiration is an incredible amount of creative energy and work ethic. My life would be so much easier if I had 10 of her."

—ROB STRINGER, CHAIRMAN, SONY MUSIC LABEL GROUP

"Beyoncé knows how to balance what fans want and how to push the envelope, experimenting with sounds and directions. That's what makes her the superstar that she is. 'Irreplaceable' was a sleeper on the album but ultimately turned out to be the fan favorite."

—MAX GOUSSE, SENIOR VP OR A&R, ISLAND DEF JAM RECORDS

"Beyoncé is a true artist who brings it every time. My favorite song will always be 'Flaws and All.' So much feeling, so beautiful; her voice sounds amazing."

Woman of the Year
Beyonce
Congratulations from L'Oréal Paris
L'ORÉAL
PARIS
BECAUSE YOU'RE WORTH IT.™

What else is on your to-do list?
I'm interested in a lot of different things. I'd like to get involved in videogames since I really love Wii Fit. I think it would be a great idea to incorporate choreography because for me my workout is way more fun when it involves dancing as opposed to running on a boring treadmill. So I would love to do some kind of fitness game but incorporate dance and performance into it. I think a lot of women would enjoy that.

I also want to continue to produce films—even if I'm not in them—as well as a documentary on my life. Actually, I'd like to do a film loosely based on my father's [Mathew Knowles] childhood and school years. He's had an interesting life. But that will probably be in a couple of years.

Is there a chance you'll start your own label?
Yes, eventually, when I have time. I'm doing so many things, I have to slow down a bit so I can focus. [laughs]

Have you thought about taking a longer break after this tour?
I think after maybe a month or two months, I'd be really bored. But I don't see myself working this hard for the rest of my life. It's just too much to do forever. I thank God I started touring and building a fan base when I was really young. So now if I took off a couple of years, I think I'd still be able to come back, go on tour and do records. I'm still a young woman.

What sparks your creative vision?
I've always tried to pick songs and singles that were a part of pop culture, a part of things that people are passionate about and want to talk about and debate. "Single Ladies (Put a Ring on It)" is an uptempo song that's fun. But it's also something women go through every day. "Irreplaceable" is also about something people experience every day. More than anything, I always try to challenge myself and do a variety of different things. On "Sasha Fierce," the slow album showcased my vocal ability a lot more. And I had the uptempo album to showcase the dance.

I've tried to be an artist who pays attention to detail and who is also a strong vocalist, performer and songwriter. I'm very happy to see other female artists challenging themselves to do everything. That's something we started with Destiny's Child. We were very young, writing and producing our own songs. I'm very proud of that.

What will Beyoncé/Sasha Fierce be doing in five to 10 years?
Probably the same things. But maybe I'll be spacing it out a little more. [laughs] Not every year; maybe every three years.

Maybe also a mom?
In five years . . . yes, probably.

Any ideas yet about your next album?
I haven't actually started writing anything. Maybe after I leave for Australia on the next leg of this tour.

You can't end this interview without one last question: Any truth to the rumor about a Destiny's Child reunion tour and/or album?
I don't know if we would do another record anytime soon. And we haven't talked about a tour. That's just been something floating in the media. If people keep talking about it, maybe we'll do it. If that's what people want . . . who knows? But whenever the girls need me or I need the girls, we're here for each other. ••••

Modern romance: BEYONCÉ with JAY-Z

"My favorite Beyoncé song would have to be 'Dangerously in Love.' She sang it with such conviction and passion; I believed every word. And that's what is great about Beyoncé: She knows how to personalize every song she sings."
—RICO LOVE, SONGWRITER/PRODUCER

"Beyoncé is the greatest performer alive. How can one person have all that talent, grace and work ethic? Phenomenal."
—JOHN LEGEND, SINGER/SONGWRITER/PRODUCER

"It's a privilege to work with someone as talented and driven as Beyoncé. Besides being such an accomplished performer, she's also a great producer with some of the best A&R instincts for what makes a good song. She's not interested in knowing who the song was written by before she hears it. For Beyoncé, it's all about the music, not the personalities behind it."
—BIG JON PLATT, PRESIDENT OF WEST COAST CREATIVE, EMI MUSIC PUBLISHING

"The greatest singers each have their 'thing' that they do better than anyone else. Beyoncé's thing is taking a great song and making it an event. She adds her own personality and vocal prowess like a master chef adds the missing ingredient to his signature dish. Beyoncé brings that missing ingredient."
—RYAN TEDDER, SONGWRITER/PRODUCER AND MEMBER OF ONEREPUBLIC

"Beyoncé is a great talent, extremely charismatic. People are drawn to her like a magnet. She's a down-to-earth young woman who, with all she has accomplished, is not full of herself. She is class personified."

ACTING 'B'

Years After Her MTV Debut, Beyoncé Is A Celebrated Actress With A No. 1 Movie To Her Name

BY MARIEL CONCEPCION

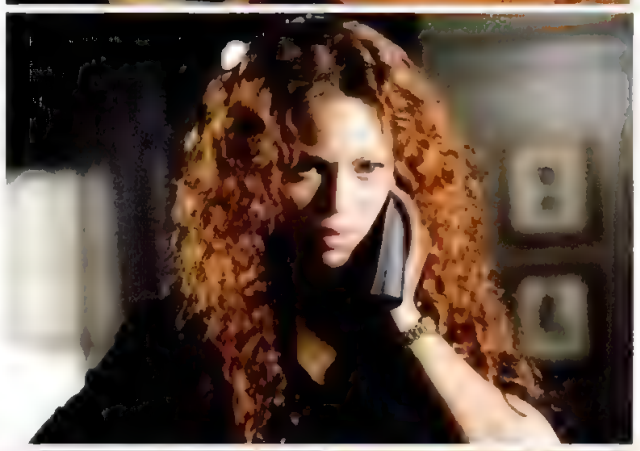
It was just eight years ago that fans first caught sight of Beyoncé's acting talent.

At the age of 20, the singer added the new achievement to her résumé when she starred in MTV's "Carmen: Hip-Hopera," a made-for-cable movie in which she played an aspiring actress named Carmen Brown, alongside Mekhi Phifer, Mos Def, Wyclef Jean, Jermaine Dupri, Bow Wow and others.

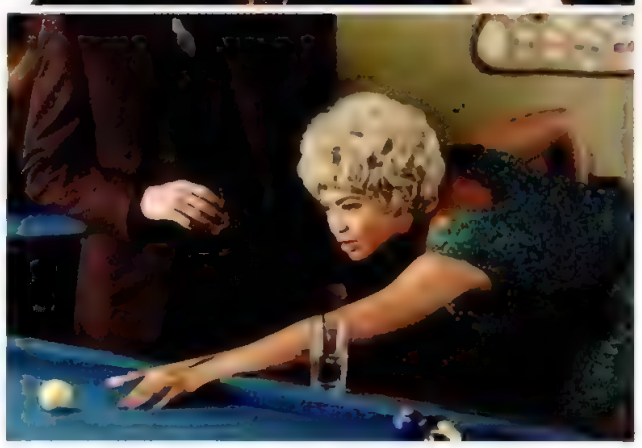
Today, Beyoncé has gone from the small screen to the big screen, acting in six theatrical releases.

When she began her film career, Beyoncé made sure she gained as much experience as possible to be considered a solid actor. A year after filming "Carmen," the singer landed a co-starring role in the third installment of Mike Myers' Austin Powers series, "Austin Powers in Goldmember." She appeared in the role of Foxxy Cleopatra.

Then, in 2003, Beyoncé starred in the romantic comedy "The Fighting Temptations" with Cuba Gooding Jr. Next, in 2006, she co-starred with Steve Martin in a remake of "The Pink Panther."



The same year saw the release of "Dreamgirls," in which Beyoncé starred alongside Jennifer Hudson, Jamie Foxx and Eddie Murphy, in the the story of the fictionalized '60s R&B group the Dreamettes. Beyoncé co-wrote "Listen," the lead single for the film's soundtrack, which was nominated for an Academy Award.



One of her latest and most noteworthy films is 2008's "Cadillac Records," a biopic about the Chicago-based record company executive Leonard Chess and the musicians who recorded for his label, Chess Records. Beyoncé portrayed singer Etta James—one of her most celebrated roles to date—and garnered producing credits for the film, yet another notch under her belt.

"The film was initially offered to her as just an acting vehicle, and it was something she really responded to in terms of material, role and character," says Andrea Nelson Meigs, Beyoncé's film agent at International Creative Management.

Screen star: BEYONCÉ in (from top) 'The Fighting Temptations,' 'Austin Powers in Goldmember,' 'Obsessed' and 'Cadillac Records.'

"But she was drawn especially to her role because of what Etta James represented in the music world, and so she wanted to get involved in a more intricate way—both in development for casting and music."

So Beyoncé became one of the boosters for the film, helping to bring all the different elements of the movie together, Meigs says. She aided actors with their scripts, shared her thoughts on how scenes should be shot and even got involved with lighting, among other things.

And earlier this year Beyoncé co-starred in "Obsessed," which opened at No. 1; it's the second film she co-produced after "Cadillac Records." In "Obsessed" she's married to a business executive being stalked by a co-worker.

At one of the meetings during the filming of "Obsessed," Beyoncé impressed observers with her film-producing vision.

"I sat there and watched her give her notes on the script that she had outlined," Meigs says. "They were typed up and articulated how scenes could be better . . . I was so impressed and blown away.

Meigs adds, "I don't think any of us expected or anticipated that.

"Oftentimes when celebs are afforded producing titles, people think those are for vanity. But what happened in that room alone made Beyoncé deserving of her credits."

Although the film received mixed reviews, it has grossed $68.3 million at the North American box office, according to Nielsen EDI.

What's left for Beyoncé to conquer in the world of film and acting?

Meigs says Beyoncé is looking over a couple of acting and producing projects, although none can yet be announced.

"Going to Broadway and winning a Tony is also something we foresee in the near future," Meigs says. ••••

"She's an incredible vocalist and one of the hardest-working artists in show business, not to mention a positive inspiration for women. Young people these days need strong role models, and she's that person. For all the fame and fortune she has been blessed with, Beyoncé acts like she's just the girl next door. She's a real and pure soul."

—JIM JONSIN, SONGWRITER/PRODUCER

"She is graceful and never shows any weakness or frustration despite what may be going on around her. She always has fun with whatever she is doing. A professional but still a sweetheart."

—SEAN GARRETT, SONGWRITER/PRODUCER

"Woman of the year . . . What took so long? She's been woman of the year for me for the last 10 years. My favorite Beyoncé song is 'Survivor.' It's just one of those songs that embodies strength and courage for females as well as males."

—DENNIS ASHLEY, VP OF CONCERTS, INTERNATIONAL CREATIVE MANAGEMENT

"When we worked together on 'Dreamgirls,' it was an opportunity to work with one of the true great voices in our business. I'm so proud to see her continuing in the tradition of great voices like Whitney [Houston], Toni [Braxton] and Mariah [Carey] for the next decade's listeners."

—HARVEY MASON JR., SONGWRITER/PRODUCER

"It's not unexpected that she is being recognized as the woman of the year. You're talking about a woman who is super talented, tireless—and isn't showing any signs of slowing down."

—C. "TRICKY" STEWART, SONGWRITER/PRODUCER

HEART OF AN ANGEL

How Beyoncé Gives Back

BY MARIEL CONCEPCION

Earlier this summer during a concert stop at the Izod Center in New Jersey, Beyoncé brought a little girl named Jada to the stage. While kneeling on the floor and holding in her arms a child who is battling leukemia, the 28-year-old singer dedicated to her the show's closer, "Halo."

According to the Make a Wish Foundation, which works with celebrities to grant wishes to children with life-threatening medical conditions, that dedication was Wish No. 40 that Beyoncé has fulfilled during nine years of involvement with the group.

Although she's one of some 800 celebrities who granted wishes last year alone, according to Make a Wish media relations manager Brent Goodrich, Beyoncé is one of the most popular recipients of requests in recent years.

"She's obviously an admired performer, but also, she really makes the children feel like they're No. 1 when they meet," he says.

Make a Wish isn't the only way in which Beyoncé gives back. A few years ago, she teamed with her mother Tina, father Mathew and sister Solange Knowles to start their own family foundation: Survivor. The nonprofit organization is based in her hometown of Houston and assists those who have been displaced, are homeless or have been stricken by HIV/AIDS. The Survivor Foundation also started the Knowles-Rowland Center for Youth, a multipurpose community outreach facility in Houston.

"Most recently the organization assisted with survivors of Hurricane Katrina and helped find housing for those displaced by the disaster," says Andrea Nelson Meigs, Beyoncé's film agent at International Creative Management.

Her willingness to help doesn't stop there. Late last year, after watching the documentary "Very Young Girls," Beyoncé visited the Harlem headquarters of Girls Educational and Mentoring Services, which produced the film and works to stop sexual exploitation and domestic trafficking of children.

"Her mother, Tina Knowles, reached out to us and said she'd never heard Beyoncé sound more passionate about something," GEMS founder/executive director Rachel Lloyd says.

"Two days later, Beyoncé came in and said she wanted to learn more and wanted to understand what the girls had been through. She was supposed to stay 15-45 minutes, but stayed five hours instead. At the end, we said a group prayer lead by her mother. It was very intense and emotional."

Since then, Beyoncé has become one of the faces of GEMS' national campaign "Girls Are Not for Sale," alongside Halle Berry and Demi Moore. And she arranged for girls from GEMS to get tickets and backstage passes this past summer for her concert at the Izod Center in East Rutherford, N.J., as part of her I Am . . . Sasha Fierce tour.

On that tour, Beyoncé also teamed with the General Mills brand Hamburger Helper and Feeding America, which touts itself as the nation's largest domestic hunger-relief charity, for the "Show Your Helping Hand" campaign. The campaign sought to provide 3.5 million meals through local food banks by encouraging fan donations at her concerts.

"Her name came up because in various occasions Beyoncé had mentioned how Hamburger Helper was one of her all-time favorite comfort foods," General Mills VP Beth Brady says. "So, we thought there was no one more authentic for it than Beyoncé—giving back is true to her DNA."

This is the second time Beyoncé has joined forces with Feeding America, according to the charity's president/CEO Vicki Efsarra.

"For her 2007 tour, we had a food drive at every one one of her tour stops. For this past tour, she held a press event at all her shows to help promote the drive," she says, pointing out that hunger becomes most critical in America during the summer and winter, which is why she is in talks with Beyoncé to work together again this upcoming holiday season.

"She's just so beautiful, talented—she's so impressive and grounded and manages her career very well, but she's always striving to use her voice to try and influence good in the world," Efsarra adds. "Not all human beings find a way to do that." ...

"She was completely egalitarian [working on the film "Dreamgirls"]. It wasn't about, 'I'm the star and you're not' with the other ladies. It was, 'We're all in this.' And she was sweating bullets and working hard like everyone else. In all my years of mixing with people you would say are stars, Beyoncé was the most refreshing of anyone. The whole star trip isn't there. She's so talented and cool. I adore her."

—HENRY KRIEGER, COMPOSER

" 'Irreplaceable' is a well-written, timeless record. And Beyoncé's delivery was incredible. I know I'll still be listening to that song 20-30 years from now."

—RODNEY JERKINS, SONGWRITER/PRODUCER

"I love songs that show off the emotion and rawness in Beyoncé's voice like 'Resentment' and the songs she did as Etta James in 'Cadillac Records.' This honor is well-deserved: She's one of the special angels that we're blessed to have. I absolutely love her to life."

—MICHELLE WILLIAMS, SINGER/SONGWRITER

"I still remember the first time I ever heard 'Crazy in Love' and watched the video. I was blown away by the whole combination: a great record together with an incredible performance. The energy was so in your face. Beyoncé is the total package."

—MIKKEL S. ERIKSEN OF SONGWRITING/PRODUCTION TEAM STARGATE

"I think it's very obvious what my favorite Beyoncé song is. But my second favorite is 'Single Ladies (Put a Ring on It).' It's very sparse yet very creative and the lyrics are intriguing. I don't think I've ever worked with anyone better; I can't wait to work with her again."

—TOBY GAD, CO-WRITER OF "IF I WERE A BOY"

TAKING IT ONSTAGE

Beyoncé Emerges As A Formidable Live Force BY GAIL MITCHELL

At a time when touring achievements have become an even more crucial measure of industry success, Beyoncé has grown into a formidable force in concert. ¶ Beyoncé launched her yearlong, worldwide I Am . . . tour in March. She first performed in the United States and Canada before embarking on an international itinerary that included stops in the Netherlands, France, Belgium, Germany, Portugal, the United Kingdom, Ireland and, most recently, Australia and Singapore. The tour sponsors include L'Oreal and General Mills/Feeding America in the United States; Nintendo in the States, Europe and the United Kingdom; and Crystal Geyser in Japan. ¶ Of the 55 shows that Beyoncé has logged as of Sept. 16, she has grossed $53.5 million and drawn 667,509 fans in primarily 15,000-seat arenas, according to Billboard Boxscore. ¶ In 2007, the Beyoncé Experience tour—staged at similar-sized venues—grossed $24.9 million, and 272,521 fans attended the 29 shows reported to Boxscore between April 21 and Sept. 8. ¶ "It's staggering the amount of progress Beyoncé has made at only 28 years old," Sony Music chairman Rob Stringer says. "She's doing great in the digital world and still selling physical CDs. The live touring was the last piece of the jigsaw puzzle. Now that touring level is conquered." ¶ Dennis Ashley, VP of concerts for Beyoncé's booking agency International Creative Management, adds, "I've never seen an artist work as hard as she does just in rehearsal for the perfection she brings onstage to fans." ¶ Taking a break from the big stage, Beyoncé customized her touring show this summer for an exclusive and intimate engagement at Wynn Las Vegas' Encore Theater. That four-night stand ran July 30-31 and Aug. 1-2 and was taped for use in an upcoming DVD compilation. ¶ In October Beyoncé will perform in Korea, Japan, China and Ethiopia. Then in November, she'll travel to Russia, Turkey, Egypt, Greece and back to the United Kingdom and Ireland. Still on tap: dates in Brazil, South Africa and South America before the tour wraps next March.

FRAGRANCE, FASHION AND MORE

Beyoncé Is The Pretty Face Behind Several Endorsements

BY MARIEL CONCEPCION

A smile that sells: Clockwise from top, BEYONCÉ has deals with L'Oreal, Samantha Thavasa (with sister SOLANGE) and Nintendo.

Previously the face of the fragrances True Star from Tommy Hilfiger and Diamond from Emporio Armani, Beyoncé is readying the release of her own scent early next year, with a name that's still under wraps.

According to Carol Goll, head of the global branded entertainment division of International Creative Management, Beyoncé signed a deal with fragrance house Coty, which is also behind perfumes for Jennifer Lopez, Sarah Jessica Parker, Celine Dion, Halle Berry and David and Victoria Beckham. The agreement authorizes Coty to create an "alluring and sophisticated" perfume that "personifies me as a woman [and reflects my] inner power," Beyoncé said in a statement announcing the fragrance.

The new fragrance, slated to hit stores in early 2010, is the latest addition to a lengthy list of endorsement deals for Beyoncé, with companies from Pepsi to L'Oreal.

This past spring, Nintendo DSi premiered a worldwide commercial for its game "Rhythm Heaven," in which Beyoncé stars. Also this spring, Crystal Geyser announced that Beyoncé is the new spokeswoman for the water brand in Japan and would be featured in its ads there.

Also in Japan, Beyoncé and sister Solange Knowles are the faces of Samantha Thavasa—a Japanese fashion company that launched in 1994 and specializes in handbags for young women.

"It's tough, it's fun, and it's sexy," Beyoncé said in a statement about Samantha Thavasa's latest Disney handbags line, which the siblings recently promoted in Japan.

Beyoncé's longest-standing endorsement deal is with cosmetics brand L'Oreal, with which the singer signed a five-year contract in 2004.

"The one thing that attracts someone to Beyoncé is her authenticity," Goll says. "She's really about her lifestyle, her strong feelings of empowerment, her beauty and her passion."

Goll adds that before signing any deal, Beyoncé's team examines a brand's perception in the marketplace, its share of the market and how it stages campaigns.

"We definitely don't want to do one-offs. We'd rather do long partnerships," Goll says.

Moving forward, Goll says there will be more partnerships, but she doesn't offer any details. Goll says of Beyoncé: "Whenever she puts her name on something, it's organic and people can easily see the affiliation. Crystal Geyser is a product she drinks and delivers a message about purity, health and fitness that she wants to exude." ••••

BEYONCÉ ON THE CHARTS

Beyoncé has been a force on the Billboard charts since Nov. 29, 1997, when she and her fellow Destiny's Child members debuted on the Billboard Hot 100 with their first hit, "No, No, No." Since then, between her solo sets and her albums with Destiny's Child, Beyoncé has racked up 37 Hot 100 hits. They include five solo No. 1s and another four with the group. ¶ Destiny's Child's "Independent Women Part I" leads Billboard's exclusive recap of Beyoncé's biggest Hot 100 hits. The track spent 11 weeks at No. 1 on the chart in late 2000 and early 2001. It reigns as the song with the most weeks at No. 1 by a female group. ¶ On the Billboard 200, seven studio albums have charted from Beyoncé and Destiny's Child combined. The group's 1998 self-titled set was the first to chart, peaking at No. 67 and selling 831,000 U.S. copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. Since then, every studio set released from either act has peaked in the top five and sold more than 2 million copies stateside. ••••

Disco Inferno: LADY GAGA

Billboard's Rising Star Breaks Records And Shatters Boundaries

BY CORTNEY HARDING

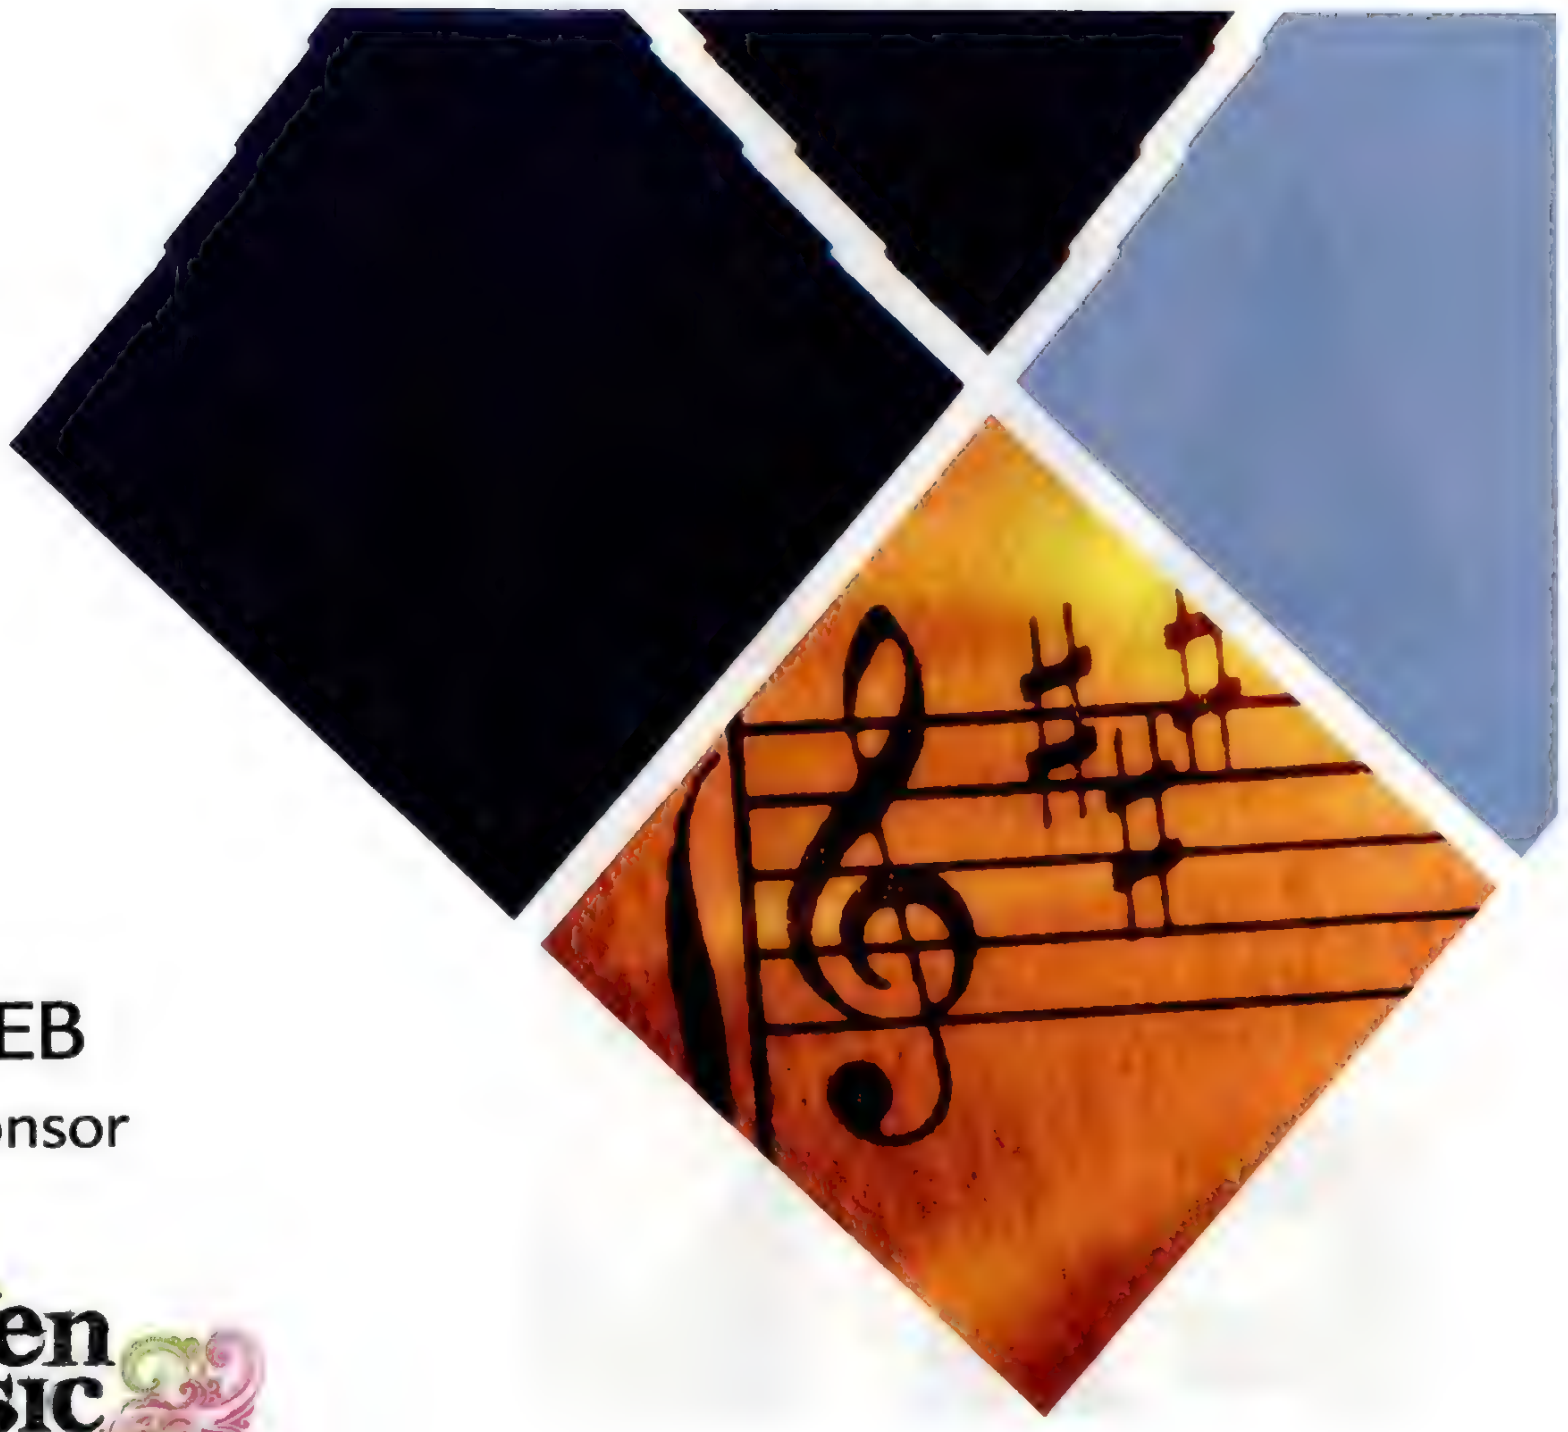
Lady Gaga is being honored as Billboard's Rising Star, but it seems more accurate to call her a skyrocketing star—of music, videos and fashion so avant garde that it sometimes involves the wearing of Muppets. Her album "The Fame" is the best-selling debut album of this year in the United States with 1.3 million copies sold, according to Nielsen SoundScan. It has spawned four top 10 Billboard Hot 100 hit singles, including two No. 1s: "Just Dance" and "Poker Face." And it's the fifth-biggest-selling album of the year overall, behind only Michael Jackson's "Number Ones," Taylor Swift's "Fearless," the "Hannah Montana Movie" soundtrack and Eminem's "Relapse."

Even though Stefani Germanotta paid her dues performing on the Lower East Side and in NYU college bars, the artist known as Lady Gaga seems to have sprung onto the pop stage fully formed and fully fabulous. But Gaga isn't just a talented recording artist and compelling performer. She's an accomplished songwriter who has licensed tracks from "The Fame" to more than 100 placements and has written for such names as Fergie, the Pussycat Dolls, Britney Spears and New Kids on the Block.

A few months ago, she struck a deal with Steve Stoute's Translation branding agency. Rather than connect her with brands, Stoute says he'll treat the performer herself like one. "I don't just want to do deals for a check with her," Stoute told Billboard. "She's at the point where she's bigger than life. She has transcended music."

Gaga has become known for wearing larger-than-life outfits, but she's not just trying to get attention. She's making a statement about living the glamorous life and defining her own identity in the public's ever-expanding field of vision. "There are all these places where art and self-expression and clothing can intersect," she told Billboard. "When I wore the Kermit outfit [a blouse and hat made of plush dolls], it was a commentary on wearing fur."

Gaga's visual aesthetic can also be seen in her videos, which were nominated for nine awards at the 2009 MTV Video Music Awards, including best new artist, video of the year, best female video and best pop video for "Poker Face." She went home with the trophy for best new artist and a solidified reputation as a live artist after giving a performance that recalled both early Madonna and the movie of Stephen King's "Carrie."



Gaga's year isn't over yet. On Nov. 24 she'll release "The Fame Monster," a double-disc repackaged version of her debut that will include several new songs, including her fifth single, "Bad Romance." And after that, who knows what she'll do—or wear—next. ••••

ALL IN THE FAMILY

PEDRO, JENNI, LUPILLO AND JUAN RIVERA REVEAL THE SECRETS TO THEIR REGIONAL MEXICAN MUSIC DYNASTY

BY LEILA COBO

Regional Mexican music has always been a business of mavericks, many of them as bold and entrepreneurial as the characters depicted in the genre's hits.

In the United States, a significant part of that business has been forged by a family whose patriarch broke into the business by selling cassettes in a cantina in Long Beach, Calif.

Pedro Rivera founded his own label, Cintas Acuario, in the mid-'80s, launching the careers of multiple acts, including those of his children, Lupillo and Jenni Rivera—two of the most visible and top-selling names in the regional Mexican genre—as well as that of up-and-comer Juan.

In turn, in a genre steeped in tradition, Jenni and Lupillo stand out as pioneers of a new generation of artists who—like pop stars—have presented themselves as personalities as well as artists.

Pedro, an immigrant who came to the United States in 1966, is also developing the careers of two other sons, Pedro Jr.—who sings Christian music—and Gustavo. Another daughter, Rosi, plans to record in the future.

The distinct arcs of each of the Riveras' careers underscores the versatility of the regional Mexican business and how it has redefined itself to preserve its position as the biggest, most lucrative Latin music genre in the United States.

"The Rivera family represents the essence of regional music and the Mexican community in the U.S.," says Gustavo Lopez, president of Fonovisa Records, which releases Jenni and Juan, and Disa, which releases Lupillo. "Their vast musical talent combined with their excellent approach to the business have and will continue to make them a powerhouse."

The top-selling family member, Lupillo, has sold 1.1 million albums in the United States, according to Nielsen SoundScan. Jenni has sold more than 700,000, while Juan, who's younger and only recently signed with a major label, stands at 67,000.

All the Riveras have espoused a patient approach to stardom, recording for years before hitting it big. All tour constantly, with Jenni selling out two nights at the Nokia Theatre in Los Angeles in July, grossing nearly $1 million with an attendance of more than 12,000, according to Billboard Boxscore. All learned the music business from the bottom up and, following their father's advice, all kept ownership of their master recordings.

"Lupillo and I both worked at my father's record label," Jenni told Billboard in an interview last year. "We know how to deal with distributors and stores. We accidentally turned into artists ourselves, so we know how to hire a promoter, who to deal with, and we've built it up little by little. More than an artist, I'm a businesswoman."

Pedro got started in show business as a photographer in Long Beach nightclubs and cantinas. Eventually, he started singing once a week, then began writing and performing his own material.

He became an accidental impresario after meeting singer Genaro Rodriguez, who had released an album with a small indie label. Rodriguez's master reverted back to him when the album flopped, and on an impulse, he gave it to Pedro.

Pedro took the master and produced thousands of cassettes, which he then sold along with the photographs he took of nightclub patrons. He began taking cassettes to local distributors and selling the rest at swap meets during the weekends. Eventually, other groups approached him to record and distribute tapes, including El Chapo de Sinaloa in 1986 and Los Razos and Graciela Beltran in 1987—all names that went on to become major stars in the genre years later.

Although Pedro didn't have any musical training or background—and he openly admits this—he did have an eye for talent. And he realized early on that there was money to be made from those home-grown recordings.

"All my artists are licenses," says Pedro, who has refused to sell his publishing catalog through the years. "For example, say you recorded with me 10-12 years ago and had no success. And suddenly you have a hit. I take advantage of that and do a 15-hit compilation and offer it to a label."

Pedro also hit on another notion early on: Because he didn't have the budget to take singles to radio, he exhorted his artists to try their luck with corridos, the narrative subgenre of regional Mexican that relates stories of heroes and anti-heroes, which now is gaining unprecedented traction on radio (see story, right). Pedro says, "I used to tell my artists, 'We have to study corridos, sing corridos, because they can help us sell albums, regardless of who sings them.' "

For Jenni, it was the corrido "Las Malandrinas" that pushed her to general awareness after recording several other albums that did little commercially.

Pedro licensed the album to Fonovisa, and Jenni pounded the pavement promoting it at a time when the genre was catching on—but only among male singers.

"It was the late 1990s and the early 2000s and the female artists were singing ballads and romantic fare," Jenni says. "So I figured, 'I'm not typical at all in any way, so I'm going to do what the guys do but in a different voice.' I wrote it myself, I went and knocked on doors myself, spoke with programmers myself, and they listened. And they said, 'We'll give the song the opportunity to air, and we'll see if there's response.' And lo and behold, the song aired on [Los Angeles radio station] La Que Buena [KBUE] . . . and it put Jenni Rivera on the musical map. And then, it was up to me to stay on that map and continue to record songs that were what people wanted to listen to."

Corridos also were the initial path of success for Lupillo, who burst onto the regional Mexican scene in the early '00s armed with designer suits, cigars, wide-brimmed hats, a shaved head and a Bentley. His father licensed the album "Despreciado" to Sony Discos, and the singer went on to sell more than half a million U.S. copies, according to SoundScan.

Lupillo, who, like his sister, grew up in Long Beach and is bilingual, appealed immediately to a younger, bicultural buyer of Mexican music who identified with his home-grown nature even though he sang traditional banda music.

Jenni and Lupillo have since taken their careers in different directions. Jenni has remained with Fonovisa, which has promoted her heavily through the years although she and her father control their master recordings through Pedro's company, Ayana Musical.

Lupillo, on the other hand, signed with Univision Records after leaving Sony, then went to Venemusic and now has an artist deal with Disa.

Both siblings, however, have broken ground as artists who have taken regional Mexican music from fairgrounds and rodeos to theaters and arenas like the Gibson Amphitheatre and the Nokia Theatre in L.A. In fact, Lupillo co-hosted the Billboard Latin Music Awards in 2007.

Both have also developed distinct imaging and personas. Jenni, who often speaks publicly about her private life—including her much-publicized divorce from an abusive first husband—is developing a reality TV show and will release a biography later this year.

Juan is producing his own TV show, a blend of reality and performance that he hopes to sell to a network. "My father always taught us to work on our own and rely on no one," says Juan, who eight months ago was a contestant on a reality show in Mexico on the Azteca network. That led him to host another Azteca show, "El Festival Azteca Music," in the United States. Acutely aware of the potential of the Internet, he has hired someone to handle digital media for him in Mexico. "Even though times are rougher than ever, I'm working harder than ever," he says.

These types of extracurricular activities never appealed to Pedro, however, and he now finds sales sorely diminished and the bulk of his income deriving from his valuable master recordings.

"When I began to develop artists, I didn't have the vision to sign recording deals together with touring contracts," he says. "And that's where the money is."

However, Pedro continues to seek out new talent through his own artist development collective, El Talento, and he has his own Internet radio station, which he hopes will take off in the near future. All Cintas Acuario and Ayana Musical releases are also sold digitally on the Cintas Acuario Web site. "We have to wait for the Internet to begin working [for Latin artists]," he says. "Everything has a process." ...

Jenni, Pedro, Lupillo and Juan Rivera will speak at Billboard's Regional Mexican Music Summit Oct. 8 at the Hyatt Regency Century City in Los Angeles.

BEYOND BORDERS

A NEW WAVE OF RISQUE NARCOCORRIDOS GAINS POPULARITY —AND RADIO PLAY— IN THE U.S.

Corridos—songs that tell the stories of notorious characters—have gained new prevalence among mainstream followers of regional Mexican music thanks to artists that are daring to sing in the bluntest of terms and radio's new willingness to play the racy songs.

Corridos have traditionally tackled many subjects in many ways. For the last three decades, a popular subgenre has been narcocorridos, for example, which tell tales of drug dealers and their exploits

Until recently, however, songs that got too explicit were rarely, if ever, played on radio. That is no longer the case, with acts like Larry Hernandez, El Compa Chuy and El Potro de Sinaloa rising on the charts with tracks like "El Katch," "El Piloto Canavis" (The Cannabis Pilot) and "El Sr. de la Hummer" (The Guy With the Hummer).

"What's very interesting is that radio is increasingly playing more corridos," says Gustavo Lopez, president of Disa and Fonovisa. "And stations that do so are successful and have younger listeners. So, it's not only about the movement itself but about the acceptance at radio."

For example, iconic norteño group Los Tigres del Norte debuted at No. 1 on Billboard's Top Latin Albums chart with their new album, "La Granja," at the same time the single of the same name hit No. 1 on the regional Mexican airplay chart. This is the first time a corrido hit No. 1 on that chart since Los Tigres' "La Reina del Sur" did so in 2003.

Los Tigres pioneered the commercial corrido, singing about drug trafficking long before it was acceptable to radio. But unlike today's crop of acts, which bluntly spell out drug usage and violence, Los Tigres' style is far more subtle.

"What happens around us is the same," says Jorge Hernandez, lead singer of Los Tigres. The way things are told, however, is different. "Our proposal, like [those of journalists], lies in providing information that people have actually experienced. But our reality doesn't rise to this level of fiction."

Songs like the legendary "Camelia la Tejana," for example, tell—in beautiful prose—the story of drug-trafficking lovers Camelia and Emilio, with Camelia shooting Emilio after their successful heist when he confesses he loves someone else. The current hit "La Granja," in turn, is a parable that compares corrupt government to animals in a farm (and yes, it has been compared to George Orwell's "Animal Farm").

In contrast to Los Tigres del Norte, the new crop of acts leaves nothing to the imagination. The players in their songs traffic drugs, they get high, and they make money, as evidenced in the hit "El Katch," performed by both El Compa Chuy and El Potro de Sinaloa ("Armani, Dolce y Gabbana, Land Rover to cruise/With dollars in my bag and Buchanan's to drink.")

Popular corridos include Larry Hernandez's "El Baleado," which reached No. 14 on the regional Mexican airplay chart in July, and El Compa Chuy's "El Katch," which is essentially a party song and went to No. 2 the same month.

Few of these hardcore narcocorridos have entered the top 10 of the regional Mexican airplay chart. However, José Santos, president of Santos Latin Media, which consults many radio stations nationwide, says this is a function of certain songs being popular only in specific areas. Because corridos are essentially stories, they often refer to specific regions in Mexico and appeal to pockets of the population that identify with those regions.

A factor in radio programming, Santos says, is that fans—especially those from Mexico—request specific songs. In addition, popularity on the Internet, where many acts have garnered hundreds of thousands of hits on YouTube and MySpace, spurs radio interest.

Larry Hernandez, for example, has been putting out albums since 1999 but only gained radio airplay after he signed with Fonovisa. (Hernandez was shifted to Fonovisa after his original label, Machete Music, was acquired by Universal.)

"I don't think this would have been possible without a big label," he says. "Getting onto radio is hard, but when people request the song, nothing is hard. 'El Baleado' started climbing. There were radio stations that didn't want to air it but they finally programmed it. Anything is possible when people want to listen to something."

"El Baleado" is a track from Hernandez's new album, "16 Narco Corridos," which is No. 7 on the Top Latin Albums chart. The song is a day in the life of a hard-drinking, card-playing drug dealer, and the video plays out as an ode to the lifestyle.

However, Hernandez says he in no way seeks to glorify that way of life. While some of the appeal may lie simply in its shock value, composer/singer Hernandez says he sings about what he knows. "I lived violence as a child," says Hernandez, who's also an avid reader of books about drug cartels and the drug trade. "I was born in Los Angeles but was raised in Mexico, and as a boy, I saw how this person or the other was killed. They are my experiences."

But while this may be the reality in Mexico, it isn't the same in the United States. This fact, producer Adolfo Valenzuela says, makes the songs harmless—and appealing—in the United States. "Here, it would be almost impossible for [young people] to go around toting guns," says Valenzuela, whose company, Twiins Enterprises, has signed several new acts like El Kommander. "I think they merely see it as something forbidden and cool. They see it as a new trend." —LC

BILLBOARD'S TOP 10 WIRELESS ARTISTS

BY ANTONY BRUNO

The mobile music landscape has changed dramatically in the last two years, as the iPhone revolutionized the capabilities of wireless devices. New apps are forging new links between artists and fans, as the phone evolves beyond a sales platform for ringtones to a hotbed of new ways to entertain and communicate. And while there isn't any shortage of artists pursuing projects in this exciting new space, only a handful are taking the lead, cutting new trails for others to follow as the landscape changes around them. Here, Billboard presents its second Top 10 Wireless Artists list, identifying the acts setting standards in how to use mobile for promotion and profit.

FALL OUT BOY: THE INNOVATORS

Most artists are content to use today's mobile applications in the most basic way possible: adding their content to a template and watching what happens.

The members of Fall Out Boy take the tools available and make them their own by integrating mobile services into a broader interactive experience. While plenty of bands let fans download photos to set as wallpaper images for their phones, last year Fall Out Boy made a game out of a series of collectible Tarot cards. Rather than just listing the number for SayNow—a service that lets bands and fans trade voicemails—the group hid the number in the music video for "Headfirst Slide Into Cooperstown on a Bad Bet." The first message the band posted to the service came from "Tiffany"—the robot lead character of a comic book series called "Fall Out Toy Works"—reading a URL directing fans to the online comic.

In each case, Fall Out Boy keeps fans engaged by adding another layer of entertainment. It was one of the first bands to set up a special Web site where fans could upload mobile photos while at concerts. For this year's Believers Never Die tour, it gave away tickets as part of a mobile messaging sweepstakes. The group is legendary on Twitter—one of the first acts to reach more than 1 million followers—and uses its Mozes mobile fan club to poll members weekly on topics like their favorite song title and desired tour stops. And it will be one of the first bands to sell music through the new "Tap Tap Revenge 3" mobile rhythm game from Tapulous.

"When they see something working, and see the automatic reaction by the fan, they continue it and keep it going," says Dan Kruchkow, head of digital media strategy for Crush Management, which reps Fall Out Boy. "They definitely like to make it very interesting for the fans."

U2: THE DEAL-MAKERS

Here's the kind of clout U2 has these days: When the band announced that BlackBerry was sponsoring its 360° world tour, the move drew headlines for the fact that Apple—which sponsored its last tour—was no longer involved.

In support of the BlackBerry-exclusive mobile version of its "No Line on the Horizon" album, U2 appeared in a BlackBerry TV spot reminiscent of its earlier iPod ads. The band's app lets users sample songs from the new album and link to a U2 Mobile Shop to buy the album for $10 or songs for $1.50 each. Other elements include lyrics, a news feed and a photo gallery.

Up next is an innovative set of social tools that will allow fans at U2 concerts to mark where they're sitting against a map of each venue, and the ability to chat and share photos with other app users attending the same concert. A "Who's Listening" tab will let users see the names and locations of other fans listening to the album on BlackBerry devices in real time.

Manager Paul McGuinness says the band's goal is to reinvent the album for the digital age, replacing CD booklets with interactive digital experiences. "As music fans, the band has always enjoyed all the detail of an album gatefold or CD booklet," he said after the BlackBerry app launched. "They want to make visual material available with their albums, and this app is the ideal way to do it."

ROB THOMAS: THE TRAILBLAZER

It's easy for artists to jump on the bandwagon once a new mobile application shows promise—it's much riskier to be the first to test out a new platform. Yet when Matchbox Twenty frontman Rob Thomas prepared for the release of his second solo album, "Cradlesong," he became the first artist to launch a mobile version of Atlantic's Fanbase platform.

As a computer widget, Fanbase lets fans aggregate news and content like photos, videos and music from official online sources, like an artist's Web site, as well as from unofficial sources, such as user-generated photos or news outlets. The mobile version does the same through the use of Adobe's Flash Lite technology but adds a few mobile-centric tweaks, such as letting fans leave voice-mails, chat with other fans or find nearby concerts based on the phone's location.

The iPhone version includes two games—"Inner Beauty" and "Reverse Barbershop"—and a version for Nokia's Ovi music and entertainment service is in the works. Thomas is also working with BlackBerry maker Research in Motion on a free app.

A self-professed "Twittering fool" with more than 100,000 followers, Thomas has sent more than 3,800 updates since late March, personally responding to fan questions from his ever-present BlackBerry. He revealed the first single from the new album, "Her Diamonds," on the service. "Everything about the way I deliver music to my fans and my relationship with fans has changed," he told attendees at Billboard's Mobile Entertainment Live conference this spring. "The only thing that hasn't is the context that goes into it."

DAVE STEWART: THE EMISSARY

Famous for his recording work as half of Eurythmics and as a solo artist, Dave Stewart also now serves as Nokia's ambassador to the entertainment industry.

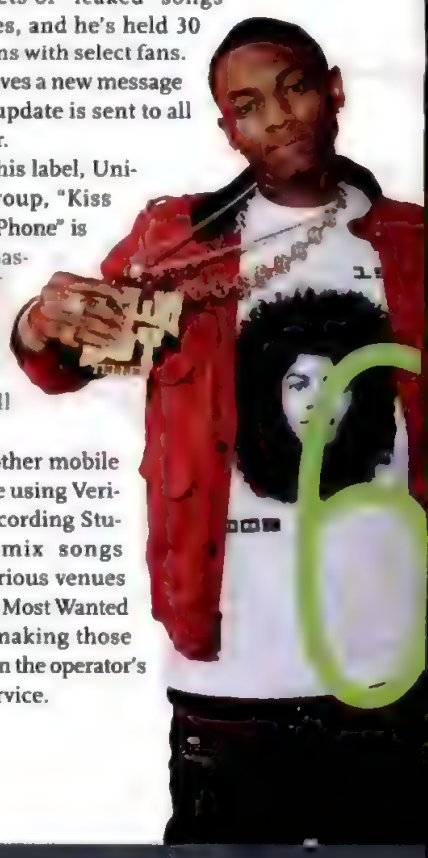
After becoming friendly with Nokia executive VP of entertainment and communities Tero Ojanpera three years ago, Stewart became the inaugural (and to date only) member of the mobile phone company's Artists Advisory Council, charged with brainstorming new mobile music products and forging relationships with the music industry elite.

Nokia could hardly have found anyone better-suited for the role. Stewart may be one of the best-connected songwriters in music—he's introduced Nokia executives to Bono and is writing songs with French first lady Carla Bruni—and he's a regular at big-think conferences like TED and the World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland.

Most recently, he used a Nokia-branded mobile game to launch the career of an artist he manages—Canadian singer Cindy Gomes. It was Stewart who convinced Nokia to build the game around the singer by having her record original music specifically for it, which players could then purchase on Nokia's Ovi music service.

TRENT REZNOR: THE APP MASTER

Ever since he left his major-label contract, Nine Inch Nails mastermind Trent Reznor has been experimenting with new digital models of distribution and promotion. In the mobile environment, he hit his peak in April by releasing the NIN: Access app, which included all the usual elements of artist apps—access to music, photos, videos and message boards—as well as a GPS-based location feature called Nearby. This lets users scan an area for other Access users as well as add location information to posted messages and photos. It even lets fans join chat sessions with others in a given area. The app uses existing formats to power most of the functionality: An extension of Google Earth lets users view conversations taking place on the app's chat function from either the phone or from the desktop, and a mobile version of Twitter—called Twinkle—powers the text messaging.



The Access app isn't his only experience on the iPhone. Reznor struck a deal to make the first artist-branded version of the popular music rhythm game "Tap Tap Revenge" late last year, and he later took on Apple's sporadic app approval process when it rejected an update to the Access app that listed his song's lyrics. The update was ultimately approved.

SOULJA BOY TELL'EM: THE PROMOTER

After launching his career on YouTube, Soulja Boy Tell'em used mobile platforms to maintain his momentum, primarily through fan communication platforms like SayNow.

Soulja Boy included his SayNow number as a line in the chorus for his hit "Kiss Me Through the Phone"—released just before Valentine's Day—and registered more than 4 million fans to his SayNow account. That makes Soulja Boy the service's No. 1 artist, according to SayNow. Since his account went live in June 2007, he's received more than 36 million incoming calls, his recorded messages have been listened to more than 100 million times and fans have left him more than 8.5 million messages. He's also recorded 300 messages for all users to hear, which includes snippets of "leaked" songs and tour updates, and he's held 30 live conversations with select fans. Whenever he leaves a new message on SayNow, an update is sent to all users on Twitter.

According to his label, Universal Music Group, "Kiss Me Through the Phone" is its best-selling master ringtone of the year and has sold the most combined copies across all mobile formats.

Soulja Boy's other mobile activities include using Verizon's Mobile Recording Studio bus to remix songs performed at various venues on the America's Most Wanted tour, and then making those tracks available on the operator's V Cast music service.

IMOGEN HEAP: THE DIY DIVA

Although signed to a major label, Imogen Heap likes to do things her own way. She's constructed a recording studio in the former playroom of the house where she grew up, and she wrote most of the tracks for her latest album, "Ellipse," while traveling through the Asia Pacific region using a portable setup.

Fans got the inside scoop on most of that process by following her on Twitter. She has averaged three Twitter posts per day since April 2008, and she doesn't use a ghostwriter. In March, she let fans create her official bio by crowd-sourcing it to the Twitter community; she received more than 1,500 responses. Those whose contributions made it into the final version received a hand-signed copy of the new album. She also posted links to the unfinished songs from the album, eliciting feedback and suggestions. As a result, Heap has more than 900,000 Twitter followers, ranking No. 18 among artists using the service. That's more than other artists who get far more radio airplay and sales, including Lady GaGa and Trent Reznor.

She uses an iPhone app called 12seconds—which lets users create a short video by capturing three photos and an audio clip from their iPhones—to upload quick updates on her daily activities. And Heap is one of the few artists using the .mobi domain name to operate her mobile Web site.

PEARL JAM: THE DISTRIBUTORS

Mobile phones weren't even on the radar in 1991, when Pearl Jam put out "Ten," but the band has certainly embraced the platform in recent years. For the album's March reissue, Pearl Jam teamed with Verizon Wireless for promotion: In the 10 weeks prior to the March 24 release, the company gave away a different song off the album each week as a mobile download to subscribers as part of the "Ten Weeks of 'Ten' " initiative.

Prior to that exclusive deal, Pearl Jam teamed with Verizon to make songs performed at each stop on its 2008 tour available to attendees. Using the mobile operator's Mobile Recording Studio bus, the band's engineer mixed three songs from each show for download on the V Cast music service—one for free and two at the standard download price of $1.29. Verizon later made ringtones and ringback tones out of the same songs. As the tour went on, the catalog grew, allowing fans to download any version performed throughout the tour.

Most recently, Pearl Jam and Verizon promoted the band's new album "Backspacer," released Sept. 20, by offering customers an exclusive ringtone and ringback tone of each song from the album every Thursday leading up to the release date, with the final three songs made available the week before release.

DAVE MATTHEWS BAND: THE COORDINATORS

After not releasing a studio album for four years, the Dave Matthews Band had plenty of time to get its mobile ducks in a row in preparation for the rollout of "Big Whiskey & the GrooGrux King" in June. Fans who entered their mobile number on the band's Web site received a free MP3 download of the first single, "Funny the Way It Is," before it was available through any other outlet, resulting in 1 million signups. The band also partnered with AT&T to give away the single to those using the Napster Mobile application in hopes of driving them to purchase ringtones and ringback tones of other songs on the album.

The band worked with the mobile fan club operator Mozes to offer special ticket alerts and track giveaways. In advance of the album release, the band created a special version of the "Tap Tap Revenge" iPhone rhythm game from Tapulous that featured older songs and tracks from the new album, becoming only one of a handful of acts to release a branded version of the game. The band then followed up with an iPhone app that lets users see the set list for upcoming shows in real time.

KEITH URBAN: THE MARKETER

By now it's become a common practice to let fans send text messages and photos to a screen during live shows, but Keith Urban expanded on the idea during his Escape Together world tour.

In addition to offering participating fans the chance to win seat upgrades, Urban gave every fan who posted a text message a free live track from a choice of four songs. Those who provided their mobile phone numbers received details about how to enter the Me, You and a BBQ campaign, backed by tour sponsors KC Masterpiece and Kingsford, with the winner getting a private concert and backyard cookout. The contest received almost 500,000 entries, which KC Masterpiece and Kingsford said was the most they've received for a promotion. Additionally, more than 32% of fans who texted messages during Urban's shows ultimately signed up to his Mozes mobile fan club, which now has 300,000 members.

Urban also created the Keith Urban VIP Pass iPhone app with the mobile service provider Zannel to let fans get news, updates and content from the tour; he preceded his world tour with a set of Verizon VIP performances exclusively for Verizon subscribers. Verizon also was a sponsor of the Escape Together tour.

THE BILLBOARD Q&A: PETE WENTZ

Fall Out Boy's Bassist Talks Mobile Strategy And Offers Advice On How To Get Fans To Love You In 140 Characters

BY CORTNEY HARDING

In this age of oversharing, it seems strange to think that until 10 or 15 years ago the most a fan could hope for in terms of communication from a famous artist was a signed picture from a fan club or a few minutes outside a tour bus after a show. When Pete Wentz and his band, Fall Out Boy, started making noise in 2003, the band was noted not only for its emo-pop music but also the way it used e-mail and blog postings to forge closer relationships with fans at a time when most acts were still getting online. ¶ Millions of albums later, Wentz and his bandmates stay in touch with Twitter and use the Web to engage fans with such quirky online games as "Fall Out Boy Trail," a play on the primitive computer game "Oregon Trail," and viral promotion campaigns like Citizens for Our Betterment, which promoted the band's latest album, "Folie a Deux," under the guise of a political organization. Wentz, who will be the keynote interview at Billboard's Mobile Entertainment Live conference Oct. 6 in San Diego, spoke about his label, the future of Fall Out Boy and why he lets his son Twitter for him.

How do you develop your digital strategies?

Ninety-nine percent of the time we come up with the ideas, like the takeoff on the "Oregon Trail" game or the Citizens for Our Betterment campaign. Obviously we don't have any programming skills, though, so we don't do any of the back end. But we go through all the bugs of everything before they come out and speak up if we don't like the way something is presented. There are times when we are approached by different people or companies. We are open to cool ideas from other people, for sure.

Fall Out Boy was one of the first bands to embrace MySpace and social networking, but now everyone uses those platforms. How do you keep up with new and disruptive technologies?

We were lucky in a weird way because we came in at the tail end of the era when bands still had videos on MTV and were still selling records and made money touring, and we had peer-to-peer downloads on MP3.com and MySpace and all of that. So, we had the best of all those things and were able to establish ourselves as a band so that if one platform disappeared, we still had other outlets.

In terms of new stuff, I'm pretty much a total insomniac, and I'm up all night looking around. I follow the kids. My brother was the one who told me to switch everything to Facebook. He was way early on it and he is younger than me. I think that you get into trouble when you stand still. You got to be like a shark.

Speaking of new things, when can we expect the next Fall Out Boy album?

I think that there's nothing worse than when you like a band and you get their record and you can totally tell that their music is uninspired and they just felt like they had to put out a record. We have been grinding so much that we haven't had the time to kind of figure out what we want to do creatively.

There have been reports that Fall Out Boy is basically done. That's not the case, right?

We put out a video ["What a Catch, Donnie"] that people can interpret as the final thing or they can interpret it as a celebration of what's going on or whatever it is.

We are going to stop doing Fall Out Boy when Fall Out Boy stops being fun. I think that the world needs a break from Fall Out Boy as much as Fall Out Boy needs a break from the world. They need to embrace some other bands out there and you can't always be shoving everything in people's faces all the time. To that extent, it is calculated.

Maybe we will start recording again in two weeks; maybe it will be three years. I don't really know. There is no plan in motion at all and no one has said the "H" word [hiatus] no matter how many times people try to get us to say it.

But you won't disappear from view, since you are so active on Twitter.

Yeah, although sometimes [toddler son] Bronx tweets for me. I was on UberTwitter and [my wife] Ashlee [Simpson] came in the room and asked if I could watch him and he just went in on Baby Twitter. It was whatever numbers or letters he put down went out as the tweet. I was like, "That's pretty cool."

As much fun as it is to have your son Twitter, you must have a broader strategy for using it.

You use Twitter two completely, vastly different ways. It could be the ultimate tool of narcissism. Yesterday I said, "I am using Twitter in its most narcissist way possible. I am tweeting in the mirror while I have another mirror set up so I can read the Tweet forwards." It can be so narcissist and selfish, but at the same time we used it to get $1 million for an organization called Invisible Children by asking followers to each contribute $1.

One of the greatest things about Twitter is pointing at stuff. For instance, Music Mondays is awesome because you are able to let people hear music that they wouldn't be able to hear otherwise.

And I'm sure you used Music Mondays to introduce your followers to bands on your label.

In terms of the label, right now Cobra Starship is really blowing up. We are working hard with them. We are working hard on a new Panic! at the Disco record. We have two bands we are looking to sign. We try to keep our label small. It was supposed to be a vanity label and then all of a sudden Panic sells like a million records and then Gym Class Heroes have a No. 1 song. But at the same time we want to keep it like it is a gang. We never really called it a label; we always called it a gang. It is unfortunate because on the Billboard charts they refer to us as a record label but I wish we could be referred to as a gang.

In addition to the label, you also have a number of other ventures. How are those doing?

We have a bar in New York, a bar in Barcelona and a bar in Chicago. I have a boutique for my clothing line and in the back we have a hair salon that's by appointment only. It is just a fun little clubhouse to hang out in when I am in Chicago. These things have always been hobbies for me. I think people think that a lot of what I do is more lucrative than it is, but the truth is a lot of the things don't make money and we are lucky when we break even. But it is not why we are doing them—this is the time to push pop art. This is the time to push pop music and bend it and make it weird. Because people out there are doing it like Lady Gaga and Kanye West. There are other people out there doing it and we want to be a part of that movement. ...

DANCE OF DAYS

The Decaydance Roster Is Pete Wentz's iPod Writ Large

THE ACADEMY IS . . .

Latest album: "Fast Times at Barrington High" (2008)
Sales: 85,000 copies
(all figures according to Nielsen SoundScan)

The Academy Is . . . formed in 2003 in the Chicago suburbs, got signed by Pete Wentz on the strength of its debut EP in 2004 and headlined the Vans Warped tour in 2006—a rather quick upward trajectory. Its emo-punk debut, "Almost Here," sold 265,000 copies, while follow-up "Santi" sold 132,000. Its latest album peaked at No. 17 on the Billboard 200, and the single "About a Girl" went to No. 88 on the Billboard Hot 100. The Academy Is . . . released an EP, "Lost in Pacific Time," Sept. 22 and is touring in the fall.

THE CAB

Latest album: "Whisper War" (2008)
Sales: 67,000

The Las Vegas band the Cab got its big break at a Cobra Starship show in 2007, where its members met Panic! at the Disco drummer Spencer Smith, who brought the band to Decaydance. The Cab's first album, "Whisper War," was released in April 2008 and entered the Billboard 200 at No. 108. The band just finished its first national headlining tour, titled What Happens in Vegas, and is currently writing its next album.

COBRA STARSHIP

Latest album: "Hot Mess" (2009)
Sales: 80,000

The Cobras struck this summer with their hit "Good Girls Go Bad," which peaked at No. 7 on the Hot 100 and featured guest vocals from "Gossip Girl" star Leighton Meester. Formed in 2006 after the breakup of frontman Gibe Sparta's previous band Midtown, Cobra Starship released "While the City Sleeps, We Rule the Streets" in 2006, followed by the Patrick Stump-produced "Viva La Cobra!" a year later. The glam-pop act is promoting its latest release and recently played the MTV Video Music Awards.

FOUR YEAR STRONG

Latest album: "Explains It All" (2009)
Sales: 10,000

One of the harder bands on the Decaydance roster, Four Year Strong owes more to bands like Lifetime and Gorilla Biscuits than some of its guylinered labelmates. After releasing an album in 2007 on I Surrender Records, the group was courted and signed by Wentz in February 2008.

GYM CLASS HEROES

Latest album: "The Quilt" (2008)
Sales: 108,000

The rap-rock act came out of the gate strong: Its first album, "As Cruel as School Children," sold 540,000 copies, and the album's single, "Cupid's Chokehold," peaked at No. 4 on the Hot 100. However, its latest album, "The Quilt," was met with a more lukewarm reception. The band is now writing a follow-up.

HEY MONDAY

Latest album: "Hold On Tight" (2008)
Sales: 64,000

The only female-fronted band on Decaydance, Hey Monday is poised to be the next Paramore. The upbeat pop-rock act has toured extensively and written plenty of hooky, heart-wrenching songs about breakups and futile crushes. The band is on the Glamour Kills tour with All Time Low, We the Kings and the Friday Night Boys.

PANIC! AT THE DISCO

Latest album: "Pretty. Odd." (2008)
Sales: 400,000

Panic! at the Disco sent fans into a panic recently when it announced that guitarist Ryan Ross and bassist Jon Walker were leaving the band. The departures raise new questions about Panic's musical direction—while it shot to fame with its glammy, theatrical debut ("I Write Sins Not Tragedies," which sold 1.8 million copies), a more retro, rootsy second album failed to grab fans in the same way. Ross and Walker have announced the formation of a new band, the Young Veins, while the remaining members of Panic are working on a follow-up album.

BINARY STARS

Decaydance Pushes Digital Promotion Strategies

When Cobra Starship titled a song on its recent album "Pete Wentz Is the Only Reason We're Famous," it was only half-kidding. During the past five years, Wentz and his imprint, Decaydance, have broken and signed a number of prominent rock acts, including Panic! at the Disco, Gym Class Heroes and, most recently, Cobra Starship, whose "Hot Mess" debuted at No. 4 on the Billboard 200.

Wentz describes Decaydance as a "gang," and Crush Management co-founder Jonathan Daniel says the label is "a family thing."

"The bands on the label all bring in other bands and help them grow," Daniel says. "The office is almost like a commune. We have studios in the back and people just hang out here."

Decaydance has taken a page from the hip-hop playbook when it comes to signing and promoting developing artists. Established bands routinely bring new acts to the label, take them on tour and discuss them in interviews. Fall Out Boy even put out a mixtape in advance of its last album featuring several Decaydance artists.

"The Decaydance logo on an album really means something," Daniel says. "It's a strong, identifiable brand at this point."

The family aspect of the label is also reflected in its structure. Decaydance is run under the umbrella of Crush Management, which also manages all the acts on the label. Decaydance originally had a distribution deal with Fueled by Ramen and went with it when Atlantic purchased the label. Decaydance's three-year deal with Fueled by Ramen/Atlantic recently ended, and even though Atlantic still distributes most of the acts, it has tried out some new partners, signing a deal with Columbia for the act Hey Monday.

Daniel Kruchkow, Crush's head of digital strategy, says this close-knit approach allows the bands to put their fans first. "Our acts have real conversations with their fans, because they realize they're nothing without them," he says. "Gabe [Saporta of Cobra Starship] is online all day long replying to his fans. They use services like SayNow and Livemode to leave voice-mails for fans and set up live calls with them."

When it comes to more ambitious digital initiatives, like Fall Out Boy's version of the "Oregon Trail" videogame, Kruchkow says he lets artists take the lead. "Pete blogged about it, the fans love it, and we thought we might as well do it," he says. "The return was huge; hundreds of thousands of kids played it."

Kruchkow and the bands also try to pinpoint which digital platforms are about to hit a tipping point. "I spend lots of time reading tech blogs, and the bands are very clued in to the different services," he says. "It's important for a band to actually like to use these platforms; it feels forced and wrong if they're not into it." —CH

Women in Music 2009

For the fifth consecutive year, Billboard's Women in Music feature in our Power Players series recognizes female executives who drive our business forward with vision, dedication and hard work.

But this year's list differs substantially from those we've presented in previous years, since we set up a nomination process that was more open and inclusive than ever.

This summer, we invited our readers worldwide to submit nominations to Billboard.biz. We promoted the nomination process in print, online and through e-mail. Female executives in every industry sector were eligible. More than 150 responded.

A team of Billboard editors then reviewed every nomination, numerically ranking the nominees on their achievements in the past 12 months, the measure of those achievements and their leadership in the broader industry.

The nominees who didn't make this list are certainly accomplished executives. But the selection of the 30 honorees featured here represents the collective ranking and judgment of Billboard's editors.

As in the past, this list reads like a roster of the top 30 people in the music business who happen to be women. But the range of their expertise reflects the achievements of a much greater number of women who are advancing our business. We congratulate them all as we present this year's Women in Music report.

1 Judy McGrath

Chairman/CEO, MTV Networks

How do you make it to the top of Billboard's Women in Music list? Bring the Beatles into the digital age. The Sept. 9 launch of "The Beatles: Rock Band" was a singular success story for MTV Networks in 2009, and while figures haven't yet been released, MTV expects the premium $250 bundle to be sold out by November. Most significantly, the game developed on chairman/CEO Judy McGrath's watch may well mark an important watershed in widening the demographic appeal for videogames that are driven by music. Meanwhile, the Sept. 13 MTV Video Music Awards—with a little help from Kanye West—did more than enter the "I'm gonna let you finish" construct into the lexicon. It helped the show garner 26.9 million viewers across MTV, MTV2 and VH1, up 17% from 2008, according to Nielsen Media Research. On the day of the awards, audience traffic to MTV.com jumped 20% over the previous year and increased the site's average daily traffic by 220%. And during 2009 as a whole, VH1 enjoyed a 12% traffic bump from the year prior, according to Nielsen Media Research, thanks to the introduction of nine new series. "Music owns a big piece of the cultural conversation," McGrath says, commenting on the past year. "The steady drumbeat of the MTV Awards, 'The Beatles: Rock Band,' followed by 'VH1 Divas' and 'Hip-Hop Honors' gives us a lot to love about music today and every day."

2 Julie Greenwald

Chairman/COO, Atlantic Records

Promoted to chairman/COO of Atlantic Records in February, Julie Greenwald has continued her winning streak at the label. Atlantic ended 2008 with the top total album share among U.S. labels and was the first label to report that 50% of its revenue came from digital sales, including downloads and ringtones. (Flo Rida, who set the record for the highest-selling digital single in 2008 with "Low," broke his own mark in February with chart-topping digital sales of "Right Round.") Year to date for 2009, Atlantic's overall album market share, including current and catalog titles, is 7.5%, holding steady with where the label ended '08, according to Nielsen SoundScan. The label this year has racked up 10 top 10 album debuts, including albums from Flo Rida, Rob Thomas, Staind, Jay-Z, Trey Songz and Pleasure P. Atlantic has also been a pioneer in the 360 business model, signing more than 50 acts to multiple-rights deals. "I am most proud of our artist roster," Greenwald says in reflecting on the past year. "We've continued to develop new acts and reposition our bigger artists while engaging in multiple-rights deals with almost 50% of our roster."

3 Jody Gerson

Co-president, Sony/ATV Music Publishing

As co-president of Sony/ATV, Jody Gerson successfully mixes creative and business acumen to propel the company to new peaks. Sony/ATV won the coveted ASCAP pop publisher of the year award in April for the first time in the company's history, in large part due to Gerson's leadership and signings, according to the company's director of operations Jimmy Asci. Moreover, Gerson's leadership has helped Sony/ATV boost its market share in the top 100 songs, as compiled by Nielsen BDS. During her first year at Sony/ATV, Gerson hit with her first signing—Lady Gaga. She has since signed Johnta Austin, Enrique Iglesias, Mike Posner, Stereo Skyline, Nikki Jean and 2AM Club, among others. She also works closely with Sony/ATV artists like Akon, Shakira, Wyclef Jean, Maxwell and Linda Perry. Gerson has also revamped the West Coast creative department and the urban department and oversees the film and TV department, led by senior VP Ron Broitman. Gerson is on the board of Alicia Keys' Keep a Child Alive organization, was recently honored by Teen Impact as a person who has made a significant difference in the lives of young people who have cancer or blood diseases and participates in the Bandier Program for the Music and Entertainment Industries at Syracuse University.

4 Kathy Willard

Executive VP/CFO, Live Nation

In her role as Live Nation executive VP/CFO, Kathy Willard has worked to identify at least $40 million in expected savings from the proposed merger of Live Nation and Ticketmaster. (The combined entity would be worth $4.4 billion in total assets.) Since the merger announcement, Willard has spent countless hours analyzing its impact, while working alongside lawyers, U.S. government officials and executives at both companies, aiming to close the deal by year's end. "This is obviously not our typical acquisition," Willard says, citing Live Nation's $350 million purchase of House of Blues in 2006 as the company's largest previous acquisition to date. "This is really pulling together a merger of equals." Another focus of Willard's work this year was collaborating with Live Nation execs on their aggressive approach to summer concert pricing and promotions, a strategy conceived to counterbalance a tough economy. "I worked alongside the division heads to understand their business and what the implications are so they could look for ways to cut costs when ticket sales aren't coming in like we wanted to or look for other promotion opportunities," Willard says. More than 800,000 tickets have been sold through Live Nation's No Service Fee Wednesday summer program, she notes.

Sylvia Rhone

President, Universal Motown Records

Universal Motown Records president Sylvia Rhone could have earned her place on this list solely for signing both of hip-hop's most touted MCs of 2009: Kid Cudi and Drake. Kid Cudi released his debut, "Man on the Moon: The End of Day," last month, and it sold 104,00 copies in its first week, according to Nielsen SoundScan. "We didn't have a traditional hit single at radio, but that wasn't central to the success of our campaign," Rhone says. As for Drake, who was the subject of one of the biggest bidding wars in recent times, he will release his debut, "Thank Me Later," in early 2010. The album will feature collaborations with Kanye West, Jay-Z and Lil Wayne, with whom Drake is currently touring. And speaking of Lil Wayne, the Universal Motown artist, who marked the highest first-week sales last year when his "Tha Carter III" album sold 1 million copies, has the highest-grossing hip-hop tour of the year—and the most lucrative rap jaunt ever, according to Billboard Boxscore. Seventy-eight Lil Wayne headlining concerts in North America from Dec. 14, 2008, to Sept. 6, 2009, grossed approximately $42 million and drew nearly 804,000 fans. Meanwhile, Rhone's deals in the past year have expanded Motown's scope in A&R and the digital arena.

Debra Lee

Chairman/CEO, BET Networks

In the past year Debra Lee, chairman/CEO of BET Networks, led her company to a number of notable accomplishments, including spearheading a new programming strategy that led to the launch of "Keyshia Cole: The Way It Is," "Sunday Best," "Brothers to Brutha" and "Tiny & Toya." According to BET, "Tiny & Toya" just finished its first season as the No. 1 original series in the channel's history. In the second quarter, BET had its strongest three months in the network's 29-year history, with viewership up 34% over the same period of 2008, according to Nielsen Media Research. BET also made a significant commitment to encourage viewers to vote in the 2008 presidential election, airing programs that sought to inform and educate its audience. The coverage ranged from BET News specials to the company's first Inaugural Ball to celebrate President Barack Obama's arrival in Washington, D.C. Lee also has overseen BET's new international distribution deals secured in the United Kingdom early last year and in Africa in December, as well as the launch of the company's new network, Centric, Sept. 28. "This has been a huge year for BET," Lee says. "We've seen the highest ratings in the history of the network, but clearly the highlight was the BET Awards. It meant so much to all of us to be there for our audience at that emotional time [following the death of Michael Jackson]. The number of viewers who tuned in to see the show was a testament to Michael Jackson's far-reaching and long-lasting influence and legacy."

Alexandra Patsavas

Owner, Chop Shop Music Supervision

Alexandra Patsavas, owner of Chop Shop Music Supervision, continued the year in her role as the music supervisor for "Grey's Anatomy," "Private Practice," "Chuck," "Gossip Girl," "Without a Trace," "Rescue Me," "Numb3rs," "Supernatural" and "Mad Men," as well as for the upcoming film "The Twilight Saga: New Moon." The soundtrack to the first film in the series, "Twilight"—on her Chop Shop imprint at Atlantic Records—has sold 2.2 million copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan, making it one of the top-selling soundtracks of the past year, while boosting the profile of bands like Paramore, Muse, MuteMath and Iron & Wine. Patsavas' "Music from 'The OC' " soundtrack series—which consists of six collections—have sold more than 869,000 copies, according to SoundScan. Patsavas is a leader in making the critical connection for viewers who want to buy the music they hear on TV; most of her shows feature online music guides and video blogs that detail what songs and artists were featured, as well as giving behind-the-scenes insight as to why they were chosen for that particular episode.

Amanda Marks

Executive VP/GM, Universal Music Group Distribution

Named executive VP/GM of Universal Music Group Distribution earlier this year, Amanda Marks is at the forefront of efforts to break down the digital/physical divide. Her work allows UMGD artists and labels to move more seamlessly between opportunities in the two distribution channels. "My primary focus has been in reorganizing the company so that on both the marketing and sales sides we are one format-agnostic organization," Marks says. She also has helped create sales and marketing opportunities through deals with companies like Echospin (an integrated multiproduct e-commerce solution), ID Interactive (customizable ringtones), Kyte (an online and mobile video platform for live and on-demand content) and Dell (laptops now have the option of coming with either 50 or 100 song music bundles) that boost the personalized marketing and sales services that UMGD offers its artists and labels. She also has been leading the charge for more direct-to-fan sales initiatives. And UMGD is extending its reach into nontraditional retailers where fans are already shopping. UMGD outpaced the industry during the last year in digital album sales and digital track sales, with the latter up 19.7% at the midyear point, versus 9.9% for the industry excluding UMGD, while digital albums are up 21.3%, against 18.3% for the industry excluding UMGD.

Claudia Palmer

Executive VP/COO, Europe, EMI Music Publishing

Claudia Palmer, executive VP/COO of EMI Music Publishing, helped design a new organizational structure for the company across Europe, which accounts for about 40% of its business. The result, she says, is "better service and returns for our writers." Palmer also helped lead the launch of new copyright and royalty processing systems and also CORE (EMI Music Publishing's creative content division) in Europe. EMI's move to a centralized administration function in Europe has saved millions of dollars in costs, according to the company. She helped increase profits in the region through new revenue streams and achieved "double-digit growth" in EMI's production library business, for which she also has assumed responsibility. "We've undertaken a huge change-management program, impacting all of our systems and processes, to drive efficiency on behalf of our songwriters across the world," she says. Palmer played a key role in establishing CELAS, the European digital licensing organization that represents EMI Music Publishing repertoire, and she works closely with collection societies throughout Europe.

10 Julie Swidler

Executive VP of business affairs/general counsel, Sony Music Entertainment

As Sony Music Entertainment executive VP of business affairs/general counsel, Julie Swidler is the top-ranking legal executive for the world's second-largest music company. She has played a role in some of Sony Music Entertainment's biggest deals during the last year, including negotiations with Universal Music Group to form the Vevo joint venture and the agreement between Columbia/Epic Label Group and Roc Nation/Jay-Z. She also assisted in Sony Music's transition from a joint venture with BMG to full Sony ownership last year. Swidler is a member of the general counsel committee of the RIAA and part of the team of senior recorded-music executives involved in ongoing negotiations with music publishers in talks concerning a broad array of rights and business issues. Her philanthropic activities include involvement with the TJ Martell Foundation and a position on the board of the Music for Youth Foundation. "With the evolution of our business, I have enjoyed being involved in some intriguing initiatives and deals over the past year," Swidler says. "I am most proud, however, of being a member of the Sony Music senior executive team as we navigate through this extremely challenging time in the music business and continue to vigorously pursue opportunities to strengthen our company. Most importantly, we maintain our passion for our iconic artists as well the emerging and brand-new artists we are signing."

11 Marian Leighton Levy

Chairman, Rounder Records

Rounder Records chairman Marian Leighton Levy oversaw the release of the successful Robert Plant/Allison Krauss collaboration "Raising Sand," which won Grammy Awards for album and song of the year. (In all, Rounder this past year was nominated for 13 Grammys in 12 categories.) Leighton Levy has also boosted the company's global reach, signing Rounder's first international distribution deal. She's now gearing up to celebrate the label's 40th anniversary, which will be the subject of a PBS TV special to be taped in October. Additionally, Leighton Levy testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee in early August, on behalf of the record industry's support of the Performance Rights Act, an issue that she has supported for the past two years. All of this has led to sales increases: In 2008, Rounder's market share was up 33% over 2007 while international business doubled in 2008, compared with 2007, the company reports. "This past year has been an exciting one for me and for Rounder," she says. "It is exciting to feel that momentum continue as we enter our 40th year in the record business."

12 Marsha Vlasic

Senior VP of contemporary rock, International Creative Management

Marsha Vlasic has long represented some of the top touring acts in rock. Among her clients: Neil Young, Moby, the Strokes, Ben Folds, Elvis Costello, Iggy Pop, Lou Reed, Muse, Ozzy Osbourne and Regina Spektor. Vlasic's stature was secure as founder of her own agency, the Marsha Vlasic Organization. She has been a pioneer in music festival packaging, including Ozzfest and H.O.R.D.E. Last September, International Creative Management acquired Vlasic's company and named her senior VP of contemporary rock. She recently expanded the division with the hire of Robin Taylor, who added to the ICM roster such indie acts as the Shins, Modest Mouse, Band of Horses, the Hold Steady and Wolf Parade. Vlasic describes the growth and development of Spektor, Muse, Cage the Elephant and Devendra Banhart as highlights of 2009, along with the newly forged partnership with Taylor. She's also bullish on Moby's current tour and Osbourne's upcoming recognition as a Legend of Live at the Billboard Touring Conference in November.

13 Tammy Genovese

CEO, Country Music Assn.

As CEO of the Country Music Assn., Tammy Genovese shepherds one of the industry's most successful award shows as well as CMA Music Fest, an annual Nashville event that drew an average daily attendance of 56,000 people in June, a 7.2% increase in attendance over 2008. "I have the awesome privilege of working with a great team of staff and board members. We work extremely hard to create an event that our artists enjoy and love to play and that our fans can't live without," she says of the event, which has donated more than $2.2 million to the Metropolitan Nashville Public Schools system. "It also helps that our festival has earned a reputation for being affordable and family-friendly, which bodes well for us in a sluggish economy . . . But at the end of the day, it is about our amazing artists and their relationship with their fans." This year "CMA Music Festival: Country's Night to Rock" expanded from a two- to a three-hour ABC TV special. The 43rd annual CMA Awards airs live Nov. 11 on ABC. Genovese in the past year also commissioned an extensive research study on the habits of music consumers. "This information has helped our stakeholders understand the multifaceted marketing approach necessary to reach the various types of fans so we can not only sustain but grow our business."

14 Cynthia Sexton

Executive VP of music services, EMI Music, Worldwide

As the music industry transitions away from album sales as a major driver of revenue, Cynthia Sexton has stepped up to successfully generate new revenue streams for EMI artists, as executive VP of music services for EMI Music, Worldwide. She was one of the leaders in the negotiations to bring "The Beatles: Rock Band" to market, as well as drive the use of music in other videogames like "Grand Theft Auto" and "DJ Hero." Other partnerships include deals with iPhone app developer Tapulous on games like "Tap Tap Dance" and "Tap Tap Coldplay." EMI helped pioneer the multiple-rights 360 deal strategy with Robbie Williams and Korn, and now more than 90% of EMI's new artist deals in the past year involve aspects beyond recordings. Brand partnerships include companies like Fairmont Hotels, Guinness, Origins and JCPenney and a deal with lottery marketer Pollard to include artists on instant-win tickets. Nonphysical sales, including digital, licensing and rights, represented more than 35% of EMI's income in the fiscal year, compared with 20% of its income in the previous year, the company reports. For Sexton, however, all you need is love: "The biggest highlight of the year," she says, "has been working with Apple Corps and MTV/Harmonix on the launch of 'The Beatles: Rock Band.' "

15 Brenda Romano

President of promotion, Interscope Geffen A&M Records

It's no accident that songs from the Black Eyed Peas and Lady Gaga have been ubiquitous on the radio in 2009. The mastermind behind their airplay push has been Brenda Romano, president of promotion for Interscope Geffen A&M. Her strategy is to secure airplay at multiple formats—including top 40, rock, alternative, hot AC and triple A—resulting in Interscope Geffen A&M acts scaling the Billboard Hot 100, CHR/Top 40, Modern Rock and Rhythmic charts. Thanks to the back-to-back achievements of Lady Gaga's "Poker Face," then the Peas' "Boom Boom Pow" and "I Gotta Feeling" at the top of the Hot 100, Interscope set a new label record for remaining at No. 1 for 26 straight weeks as of the Oct. 3 chart. "It has been a very rewarding year, highlighted by Interscope Geffen A&M holding the No. 1 spot for the longest run in Billboard Hot 100 history with three consecutive No. 1s from the Black Eyed Peas and Lady Gaga," Romano says. "I'm so grateful to have the chance to work with so many talented artists and colleagues."

16 Amanda Ghost

President, Epic Records

After a successful musical recording career, Amanda Ghost became the president of Epic Records in February. She's already seen seven of her acts ascend Billboard album or single charts, including the Fray, Modest Mouse, Shakira, Matisyahu, Sean Kingston and Howie Day. Shakira's latest single, "Loba," has hit No. 1 on Billboard's Hot Latin Songs chart, and Ghost has co-written and produced an upcoming track on Shakira's new album "She Wolf" called "Gypsy." Earlier this year, Ghost was nominated for a Golden Globe Award for "Once in a Lifetime," a song co-written for Beyoncé in the film "Cadillac Records." She also co-wrote and co-produced three songs on Beyoncé's third album, "I Am . . . Sasha Fierce." Among the artists for whom she's written and/or produced songs this year are James Blunt, Daniel Merriweather and Beverly Knight, for her new album "Beautiful Night." Ghost is even heard singing backup vocals on the track "Colours" on the Prodigy's current platinum album "Invaders Must Die." "The last year has been extremely rewarding, as I have been given the opportunity to contribute to all the artists on Epic, encouraging their creativity, in order to get the very best results out of the album-making process," Ghost says. "I am very proud of all the records we have produced this year and of the extraordinary talent it took to make them so great."

17 Andria Vidler

President, EMI Music U.K. & Ireland

Andria Vidler—the first woman to lead EMI Music U.K. & Ireland—took up her new role at the start of September. But she's already hit the ground running, with the Sept. 9 Beatles Day seeing the Fab Four sell 354,000 albums in the United Kingdom in 11 days, according to EMI. But Vidler brings a wealth of marketing experience from previous roles. She was chief marketing officer at Bauer Media, home to such multiplatform U.K. music brands as Q magazine (recently chosen as one of Billboard's top 10 Maximum Exposure platforms in the United Kingdom), Kerrang and Kiss. That experience should stand her in good stead as she preps the Nov. 9 launch of Robbie Williams' comeback album, "Video Killed the Reality Star" (Virgin), the last studio album in Williams' current EMI contract. Vidler describes her new position as "the perfect mix of my former worlds. Developing creative marketing and product plans that connect with consumers and engage them in the power of music—it's almost a combination of media owner and marketing agency," she says. "There's one striking difference, however: Ultimately, music companies only get paid on results—a very healthy way of doing business."

18 Lia Vollack-Friedman

President of worldwide music, Columbia Tristar Motion Pictures Group

Among the highlights of 2009 for Lia Vollack-Friedman was overseeing the soundtrack for "Quantum of Solace," the James Bond film that featured the song "Another Way to Die" by Jack White and Alicia Keys. She also signed "American Idol" runner-up Adam Lambert to do the end-title song, "Time for Miracles," for director Roland Emmerich's upcoming disaster film, "2012." She says, "Rob Cavallo produced this epic, sweeping track for Roland Emmerich's film and we are thrilled with Adam's performance." In addition, she signed Miranda Cosgrove, star of the hit Disney Channel series "iCarly," to do a song for the animated film "Cloudy With a Chance of Meatballs." Upcoming projects include working with Christina Aguilera on music for "Burlesque," starring Cher. "When you are in a job like this, each project you work on is exciting and has its own DNA," she says. "Asking to choose highlights is a bit difficult because I love working on all of our movies. However, one of the most rewarding projects that I've done is Michael Jackson's 'This Is It.' It is an amazing piece of music history and I feel so excited to be a part of it."

"REMEMBER, GINGER ROGERS DID EVERYTHING FRED ASTAIRE DID, BUT SHE DID IT BACKWARDS AND IN HIGH HEELS."

CONGRATULATIONS LIVIA

I'M SO PROUD OF ALL OF YOUR ACCOMPLISHMENTS. TEN YEARS AND GO

20 Kara DioGuardi

Co-owner, Arthouse Entertainment; VP of A&R, Warner Bros. Records

Everyone knows that Kara DioGuardi had an amazing 2009. Not only did she debut as a judge on the top-rated show on TV, "American Idol," appear on "The View," and co-host "Live With Regis and Kelly," but she wrote a few songs that impacted the charts: Pink's "Sober," Kelly Clarkson's "I Do Not Hook Up," Theory of a Deadman's "Not Meant to Be" and Jesse James' "Wanted." But what gets her ranked on this list is her evolution as a businesswoman. Beyond songwriting, she serves as VP of A&R at Warner Bros. Records, where her signings include Jason Derulo, I-Yaz and David Hodges. Moreover, DioGuardi also is the co-owner of Arthouse Entertainment, which has a roster that includes Eman Kiriakou, the writer/co-producer of "Crush" for David Archuleta, and Gasia Livingston, who wrote "Unusual You" for Britney Spears. The success of Arthouse led to its partial sale in 2008 to Bug Music, which has also purchased DioGuardi's publishing company, K'Stuff Music. With Arthouse and Bug Management, DioGuardi is branching out to create new business opportunities. In development are ventures in apparel and videogames, which use her personality and music as branding tools.

21 Melissa Lonner

Senior producer, 'Today'

In the four years since NBC "Today" senior producer Melissa Lonner took over the morning show's entertainment coverage, she's pretty much booked every big-name artist around. This past year, she has booked all seven Boyle, the Black Eyed Peas, Jonas Brothers, Miley Cyrus, Rascal Flatts, Taylor Swift, Katy Perry, Bon Jovi, Alicia Keys and No Doubt, among others, for the show's Summer Concert Series. She was also one of the first to book Adele, Chris Brown, Coldplay, Dave Matthews Band and Kings of Leon for the morning slot. Just ask Kings of Leon about how powerful that can be: Their already hit album shot up 21% in sales the following week. Lonner is known for her innovative marketing ideas. She was the first to offer "Today" concerts on iTunes and provide customized promos on various NBC platforms, from taxi TVs to Today Show.com. Lonner has also brokered deals for artist interviews to appear on "Today" and in prime time, such as Meredith Vieira's interview with Susan Boyle that appeared on "Today" and "America's Got Talent." Lonner says, "The most rewarding part of the job is being able to introduce or highlight so many talented, deserving musicians, whether it be from the start of their career or at the height of their career. And we are so appreciative of those artists who loyally return to the show and become a member of the 'Today' family."

23 Kathy Spanberger

President of the Anglo American region, peermusic

Kathy Spanberger is peermusic's president of the Anglo American region, and she oversees a team of 67 in six countries (the United States, the United Kingdom, Mexico, Australia, Canada and South Africa). The division "contributed double-digit revenue growth in 2008," peermusic chairman/CEO Ralph Peer says. Spanberger's team celebrated the achievements of Tricky Stewart, who was named writer of the year at the ASCAP Urban Awards; Jason Ingram, who won Christian writer of the year honors from SESAC; and Juanes, who took home Latin Grammy Awards for record, song, album and video of the year. Key placements and hits resulted from the work of such peermusic clients as writer/producer Dan James in the United States, who placed songs on the "Hannah Montana" soundtrack and Ashley Tisdale's second album; Adam Argyle in Australia, who had two hits performed by Australian "Idol" winner Wes Carr; and writer/producer Steve Mac in the United Kingdom, who composed the No. 1 hit "Beat Again" for JLS. Spanberger also cites as a highlight "our new deal with Sixth House Music, which gives us the prestige of having Anahi [from RBD] on our roster." Peer praises Spanberger's "ongoing effort to champion and nurture new composers, even in this difficult environment. The work she does with new composers is what our industry depends on for its future."

22 Linda Newmark

Executive VP of acquisitions and strategic projects, Universal Music Publishing Group

Linda Newmark, in her role as executive VP of acquisitions and strategic projects for Universal Music Publishing Group, has been involved this past year in the acquisition and integration of numerous publishing catalogs, including BMG Music Publishing, Rondor Music International and Def Jam Music. She's also helped UMPG acquire catalogs containing the songs of Jimmy Webb, Grace Jones and Judy Collins. She has signed agreements relating to the works of Heart, the Bangles, George Thorogood, Stephen Bishop, the Pixies and film composer Mason Daring. Asked to cite highlights of the past year, she singles out the deal that allows Universal Music to represent the Jimi Hendrix catalog for the world outside the United States and an extension of UMPG's worldwide representation of Miles Davis' copyrights. "It is an honor and a privilege," she says, "to represent the works of true icons who have influenced the music we listen to for generations."

22 Rebeca Leon

VP of Latin talent, AEG Live/Goldenvoice

It's been a busy year for Rebeca Leon, VP of Latin talent for AEG Live/Goldenvoice, who has promoted the U.S. tours for Ricardo Arjona and Wisin & Yandel—so far the biggest Latin tours solely promoted by AEG Live. Leon says the average ticket price for Wisin & Yandel's tour is $45, underscoring her goal to keep ticket prices affordable. Yet in a sign of the strength of the Latin touring market, 80% of Wisin & Yandel's VIP packages have sold out as their tour begins, she reports. Meanwhile, AEG's new entertainment complex L.A. Live, which includes the Staples Center, Nokia Theatre and Club Nokia, has quickly become a sought-after venue for Latin acts to perform. At the Nokia Theatre, 85% of AEG Live's Latin shows have sold out in the past year. "We are proving that downtown L.A. is the new hot spot and place to go," Leon says. "It's really exciting to be a part of something that is changing the face of Los Angeles."

24 Jennifer Schaidler

Executive VP of sales, Sony Music Entertainment

Sony Music executive VP of sales Jennifer Schaidler in the past year has boosted Sony's Accel pricing initiative, which offers retailers lower pricing for physical product. Accel "was an initiative that had been going on for two to four years prior to my arrival," she says. "So getting all the [Sony] labels to sign off on it was a big accomplishment, and it gives us a great start in responding to changes at brick-and-mortar retail." While rolling out Accel, Schaidler's sales team also kept ahead of the demand at retail for Michael Jackson product, despite initial outages in the wake of the singer's death in late June. Overall, Sony Music's market share for the year to date has grown to 27.2%, according to Nielsen SoundScan, an increase of 12% over the same period last year. As a former board member of NARM, Schaidler stays involved in the retailing organization and its task force on the future of physical formats.

25 Cara Lewis

Agent/VP, William Morris Endeavor Entertainment

When it comes to booking the hottest R&B and hip-hop acts, agent/VP Cara Lewis at William Morris Endeavor Entertainment is at the top of her game. "Signing Mary J. Blige as a client this year was the No. 1 high point," she says, noting her plans to expand Blige's presence throughout the entertainment business. "But watching Kid Cudi, Asher Roth, Rihanna, Ne-Yo and others fill out club and theater tours or play multiple arenas or the Essence Festival, those are all highlights." Among Lewis' other clients are Eminem, who on the recording side of his career had the strongest first-week sales of 2009, selling 608,000 copies of "Relapse," according to Nielsen SoundScan; Kanye West, who kicks off the Fame Kills tour in November with Lady Gaga; Akon; and Lupe Fiasco. Lewis booked one of the highest-grossing hip-hop tours of the past year when West's Glow in the Dark trek, which paired the rapper with Fiasco and Rihanna, brought in more than $40 million, according to Billboard Boxscore. "There's still the ability to continue to build and grow careers and fan bases—especially at a time when business is really tough out there," Lewis says. "It's just about maximizing an artist's potential."

Alison Smith

Senior VP of performing rights, BMI

As BMI senior VP of performing rights, Alison Smith oversees BMI's royalty distribution system, both foreign and domestic, through which in the organization managed nearly $790 million in flow-through in the past fiscal year. Smith supervises royalty payment calculations and also oversees BMI's TV and cable payment system. She has led the development of new distribution methodologies and digital tools for BMI and manages the organization's writer/publisher administration and research departments. She's charged with creating efficient systems for the repertoire and customer service for BMI's affiliates. In talking about highlights from the past year, Smith cites "getting to know, and signing to BMI, the wonderfully talented and unique artist/composer A.R. Rahman, watching him win [at] the Golden Globes and the [Academy Awards], then [seeing] the world outside of India embrace him." Smith also is an active member of CISAC, the international association of rights societies, and she says the CISAC conference in Washington, D.C., reaffirmed for her that the societies will continue to "fight for the protection of the creators whose contributions are such a part of the fabric of our society."

Livia Tortella

GM/Executive VP of marketing and creative media, Atlantic Records

In the past year, in her role at Atlantic Records as GM/executive VP of marketing and creative media, Livia Tortella helped grow the company's digital business, which now accounts for more than half of total sales, counting digital downloads, ringtones and more. She played a key role in the development of the label's Fanbase application, the creation of a digital media lab at Atlantic and the opening of the label's in-house Studio 1290 for webcast performances. Tortella executive-produced the 2008 "Twilight" soundtrack, which has sold 2.2 million copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan, and she helped Kid Rock achieve sales in excess of 3 million for "Rock N Roll Jesus" (despite the decision to forgo iTunes sales). This year, Tortella has worked on developing the careers of Shinedown, Death Cab for Cutie and Paramore, among others. Along with chairman/COO Julie Greenwald, she has helped Atlantic achieve a year-to-date overall album market share, including current and catalog titles, of 7.5%, according to SoundScan. "I'm so proud of our team here at Atlantic Records," Tortella says. "Together, we are focused on breaking new artists and new ground. As the industry continues to change, artist development is still king."

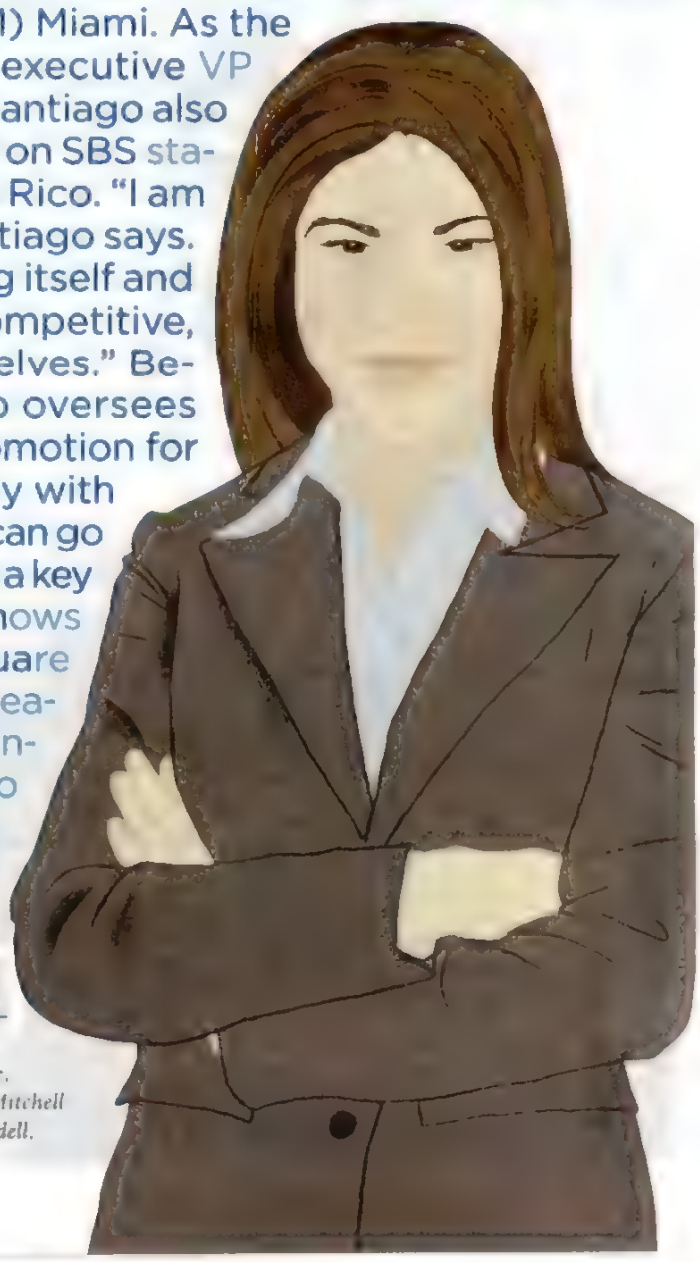
Marilyn Bergman

Former president/chairman, ASCAP

Although she stepped down as president/chairman of ASCAP in April after 15 years in that role, Marilyn Bergman's achievements during the past 12 months qualified her for this list. She remains active on ASCAP's board of directors and also as a songwriter herself. (She co-wrote "Trust Me" for the new Steven Soderbergh film of the same name.) During her tenure, ASCAP reported a record level of collections for its members in 2008. Bergman spearheaded an advocacy agenda for the rights of songwriters and composers in Washington, D.C., meeting with members of Congress to promote an understanding of the importance of intellectual property rights and copyright protections. As president of the ASCAP Foundation, Bergman oversaw the placement of the ASCAP collection at the Library of Congress. Bergman says, "I am most proud of our Bill of Rights for Songwriters and Composers—a grass-roots effort we initiated to clarify the copyright law. As president of the ASCAP Foundation, I am most proud of the Children Will Listen program, which so far has provided close to 1,000 inner-city schoolchildren with their very first experience at attending a first-class production of a Broadway musical."

Liana Farnham

VP of marketing concerts/network integration, MSG Entertainment



Barely 12 months into her job at MSG Entertainment, Liana Farnham recently expanded her role with responsibility for MSG Media properties MSG Network and Fuse. As a former label executive, Farnham's relationships reach far and have helped her marketing teams in New York, Chicago and Boston promote and book MSG venues in those markets. On the network side, Farnham helped foster the new Fuse Presents franchise, allowing acts from Dave Matthews Band to Jay-Z to partner with the Fuse/MSGE multiplatform approach. When MSG reopened the renovated Beacon Theatre in New York this year with Paul Simon (and guest star Art Garfunkel), Farnham helped produce a documentary on the concert. She was also involved in the concept and development of Steely Dan's residencies in New York, Chicago and Boston, during which the act performed entire albums as well as selections chosen by fans. Her idea to request nights in each market garnered hundreds of thousands of votes and directed fans to a Web site. "It has been our mission to align and leverage all of MSG's internal assets, including Fuse, MSG Network and MSG Interactive, to provide the artists that play our venues a broader, multiplatform marketing strategy on a scale that no other collection of venues can offer," Farnham says. "By embracing these mediums, my team has been able to create and apply digitally savvy social-media strategies that push forward both the live events and linear television, bringing fans unique ways to experience their favorite artists."

Marilyn Santiago

Programming/operations manager for Miami, Spanish Broadcasting System

A radio veteran who most recently ran her own media and talent consultancy, Marilyn Santiago was recruited by Spanish Broadcasting System earlier this year to enhance the quality of the network's Miami stations. Her new role makes her one of the most powerful female Latin programmers in the country. Highly respected thanks to a longstanding syndicated show, Santiago has a reputation for programming what she likes, as opposed to just label priorities. Although it's still early days to see a ratings impact, Santiago has sought to add more new artists to playlists while honing the identity of the two stations she directly programs, WRMA (Romance 106.7 FM) Miami and WCMQ (La Raza 106.3 FM) Miami. As the "right hand" assistant to SBS executive VP of programming Polito Vega, Santiago also influences what goes on the air on SBS stations from New York to Puerto Rico. "I am very marketing-oriented," Santiago says. "I see beyond the programming itself and I tackle the radio stations as competitive, marketable product in themselves." Beyond programming, Santiago oversees production, marketing and promotion for both stations and works closely with sales to "provide elements they can go out and monetize." Santiago was a key player in the two anniversary shows honoring Vega at Madison Square Garden last August. The shows featured an all-star cast, including Enrique Iglesias, Juanes, Alejandro Sanz and Paulina Rubio, and grossed more than $1 million in ticket sales, according to Billboard Boxscore.

The New Era

Diverse Programming At Billboard's Regional Mexican Music Summit Looks To The Future Of Latin's Top-Selling Genre

By Leila Cobo

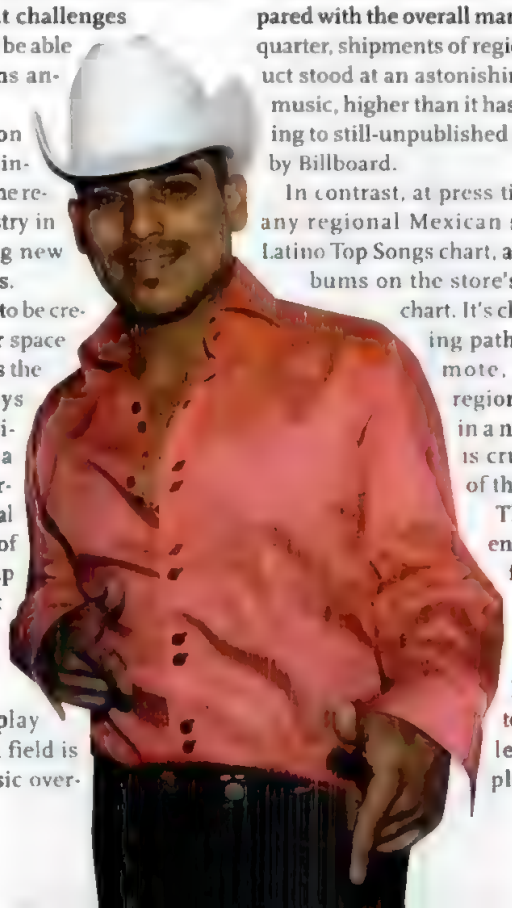
New adventures: ALEJANDRO FERNANDEZ performs Feb. 28 at Beraka Adventure Park in Cuernavaca, Mexico; below: ESPINOZA PAZ

Through good times and bad, regional Mexican music has long been the foundation of Latin music sales in the United States.

If anything, this has been particularly true in recent years, when regional Mexican fans have remained Latin music's driving force, continuing to buy physical product at a time when Latin music in general has yet to make significant strides in the digital arena.

But the status quo is now poised for change as regional Mexican music finally enters an age of digital sales and promotion even in the midst of dropping overall sales.

What happens now with the genre could be a defining point for Latin music. Even though regional Mexican is still a blip in the overall digital arena it dominates, the Latin musical landscape, and its future in new technology, formats and business models, will greatly affect the current industry.



This year's Billboard Regional Mexican Music Summit, titled "The New Era," looks at new ways of developing talent, making and promoting music, utilizing new technologies and thinking outside the box.

"How do we maximize sales efforts? How do we win in a competitive environment? How do we achieve our ratings and sales goals? How do we operate with a multimedia platform? What is the most economical way to operate during the recession?" asks José Santos, president of the radio consultancy Santos Latin Media.

"What this conference will do is help us understand where we are and where we are headed. You will be able to talk to those that are facing the current challenges and winning. You will be able to get those questions answered and more."

There's no question that the Latin music industry in general and the regional Mexican industry in particular are testing new ways of doing business.

"We must continue to be creative and fight for our space in the digital as well as the physical world," says Fonovisa/Disa president Gustavo Lopez, a speaker at the conference, noting that digital now represents 25% of his labels' income, up from 1% in 2007. But the fight for space goes beyond revenue or sales.

Learning how to play the regional Mexican field is crucial for Latin music overall. In the past year, sales of Latin music have tumbled, according to Nielsen SoundScan, with Latin album sales down by 35% compared with the overall market. But in the first quarter, shipments of regional Mexican product stood at an astonishing 75% of all Latin music, higher than it has ever been, according to still-unpublished numbers obtained by Billboard.

In contrast, at press time, there weren't any regional Mexican songs on iTunes' Latino Top Songs chart, and only 11 such albums on the store's Top 100 Albums chart. It's clear, then, that finding paths to properly promote, market and sell regional Mexican music in a new business arena is crucial to the health of the industry.

This year's conference is geared toward finding new business models and new avenues of revenue. Each panel has been programmed to include different levels and types of players; there are major concert promoters and club promoters, radio network programmers and small-station programmers, major and indie labels. In regional Mexican music, each sector is vital to the growth and stability of the genre.

In addition, those in the industry have noted that their primary concern is finding and developing new talent. For this reason, the Regional Mexican Music Summit opens with a "Talent Development" panel that features high-power executives like Lopez along with success stories like singer/songwriter Espinoza Paz, who topped Billboard's charts this year.

The intricacies of licensing—one of the few areas of growth in the industry—are explained in "The Song, the Song, the Song," a panel that traces the process from beginning to end and features publishing companies, digital experts and songwriters.

Image and promotion are also major focus points, and media from TV to the Internet will be featured on the "It's All About Media" panel. Radio is a major player here with programmers represented from across the country.

Artists-wise, the conference will feature a host of stars, from Alejandro Fernández to the Rivera dynasty—Jenni, Lupillo, Pedro, Juan, Pedro Jr. and Gustavo—in addition to a roster of marquee acts that are defining and redefining regional Mexican music. ••••

Who's Who At The Summit

Conference Panels Among The Best In The Business

By Ayala Ben-Yehuda

Billboard's Regional Mexican Music Summit, which takes place Oct. 8-9 in Los Angeles, will unite the best in the business under one roof to discuss the genre's most pressing issues. From successful artists and songwriters revealing what makes them tick creatively to touring, TV, radio and digital experts breaking down the business by dollars and cents, conference panels offer something for everyone. Here are capsule profiles of selected panelists confirmed at press time.

Mauricio Alatorre Gonzalez is the production and programming director for TeleRitmo/Multimedios Televisión. He also coordinates the branding and graphic image of Milenio Television. He is a veteran of branding and promotions of TV programs as well as postproduction.

Felix Castillo is the president of Frontera Visual, an agency that provides public relations, marketing and media production services for artists and labels. Frontera Visual's clients have included Disa Records, Sony Music, Twiins Enterprises, Universal Music Latino and Tequila Cardona.

El Compa Chuy hit No. 4 on Billboard's Hot Latin Songs chart with the corrido "El Katch," from his Gypsy Records/Sony album "El Niño Del Oro." He will join fellow corridos artists on the "Brave New Groups" panel.

Abel De Luna rose from farm worker to a career in politics and government before founding Luna Music, Luna Publishing and Luna Management. He then founded the radio chain Luna Communications, which includes La Maquina Musical, La Vaquera and Radio Tekila, where he is CEO/chairman.

Gloria España is the author of Cristian Castro's hit song "El Culpable Soy Yo," which hit No. 9 on the Hot Latin Songs chart. The Oaxaca-born singer/songwriter is the president of ECB Music Group, a production house, publisher and label.

Eddie Fernandez is the senior VP for Latin America at Universal Music Publishing Group. UMPG's roster includes Wisin & Yandel, Kike Santander, Café Tacvba, A.B. Quintanilla III, the catalogs of Gloria and Emilio Estefan Jr., Gustavo Santaolalla and Hector "El Father".

Gabriel Flores was a recording artist as the leader of La Busqueda, a group on EMI, before his songwriting career took off in 2003. His many hits include "Quédate Callada" sung by Jorge Luis Cabrera and "Hasta El Día De Hoy" by Los Dareyes De La Sierra. He is preparing to release a solo album, "La Voz Del Amor," on his Vial Music label.

John Frias is the CEO of Frias Entertainment & Marketing Group, which produces more than 200 concerts per year in partnership with brands like Corona, Budweiser, Toyota, Verizon Wireless, Diageo and Pepsi.

Televisa executive producer Ruben Galindo's recent productions include "Bailando Por Un Sueño" and "Buscando A La Nueva Banda Timbiriche." Galindo has years of experience producing novelas, talk shows, film and news.

Texas native Julie Garza is the PD at WYMY Raleigh, N.C. She is also an on-air personality at the Curtis Media Group station, where she has worked since 2005. Garza is a graduate of the University of Texas at Austin with a degree in radio, TV and film.

Hugo Gonzalez owns Hip Latin Music, which administers Marco Antonio Solís' publishing catalog in Mexico. Gonzalez is also founder/general director of the label Signos Music. His former positions include associate director at SESAC Latina and creative manager of Univision Music Publishing.

Eduardo Leon is Liberman Broadcasting VP of programming, overseeing all Liberman radio stations in the United States. He has programmed stations in the Los Angeles, Fresno, Bakersfield, Dallas, Houston and Chicago markets. He is also the founder of the consultancy Radio Ideas.

Loren Medina was a label manager at Sony Music Latin before launching the online marketing and publicity company Digital Girl earlier this year. Along with her partner in the company, Rocio Gutierrez, Medina has marketed acts like Da'Zoo and Calle 13.

Luis Carlos Monroy has written songs for Mijares, Emilio Navaira, Pesado, Alejandro Fernandez ("Que Voy A Hacer Con Mi Amor") and Pedro Fernandez ("Dime Mi Amor"), among others. The BMI-affiliated writer will perform his work at the "How I Wrote That Song" panel.

Bandamax executive producer Victor Manuel Moreno Valadez has worked at Televisa Networks for 23 years. He assumed leadership of Bandamax's production team in early 2009 and has overseen imaging campaigns and content for the regional Mexican entertainment channel.

La Nueva Rebelión was founded in 2007 by norteño veteran Esteban Sagaste, formerly of Los Llaneros De Guamuchil. La Nueva Rebelión's latest corridos album, "La Lightning," was released on Disa earlier this year.

Since joining BMI in 1997, BMI assistant VP of Latin music Delia Orjuela has signed and worked with acts including Juanes, Los Tucanes De Tijuana, Gustavo Santaolalla, Molotov, Café Tacvba, Jenni Rivera and Los Tigres Del Norte.

The Mazatlan, Mexico-based BMI songwriter Horacio Palencia's songs have been recorded by La Arrolladora Banda El Limon ("De Ti Exclusivo," "Y Que Quede Claro," "Ya Es Muy Tarde"), Los Huracanes Del Norte, Banda el Recodo, Cuisillos and many others.

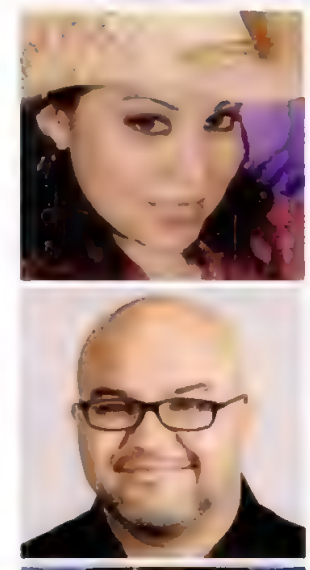
Espinoza Paz is one of the most sought-after regional Mexican songwriters. El Coyote, Jenni Rivera and Cuisillos have recorded his songs, but so has a new generation of such male soloists as El Potro De Sinaloa. Paz himself has achieved a No. 1 on Top Latin Albums with "Yo No Canto, Pero Lo Intentamos."

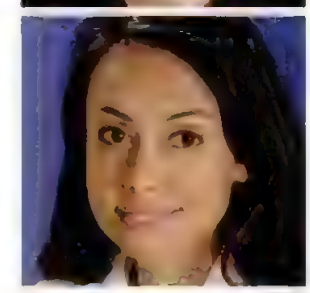
Javier Rivera is the president of Mexico Musical, a management and booking agency. He has more than 50 years of experience as a businessman and has promoted shows in Mexico and the United States. He has worked with K-Paz De La Sierra, La Numero 1 Banda Jerez, Brazeros Musical, and others.

Cesar Rodriguez was a booking agent and radio promoter for Viva Music before founding Discos CBR, the booking company Hispano America Entertainment and the publisher EBR Music Publishing. His label roster includes Banda La Unica De Jerez and Lucho De Santiago. He also books Alerta 3, Banda La Unica De Jerez and K'rolina.

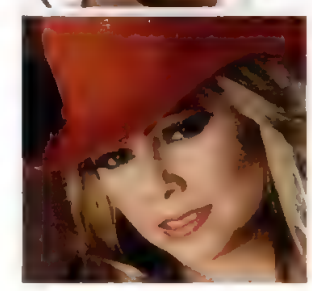
Composer/producer Toby Sandoval is behind countless hits, including Sergio Vega's "Quien Es Usted" (with Erika Vidrio) and Los Primos De Durango's "Fuego En Tu Piel" (with Adrian Pieragostino). Sandoval, a former bandleader for Paulina Rubio, is signed to Universal Music Publishing and BMI.

Jose A. Santos is founder/president of Santos Latin Media, a media consultancy based in Southern California. His experience includes stints as OM, GM and PD of Latin stations nationwide. Santos consults on programming, sales, marketing and promotions in formats from regional Mexican to Spanish adult hits.





Roberto Tapia's most recent Fonovisa release is "El Niño De La Tuna," in which he duets with Larry Hernandez, his co-panelist at Billboard's Regional Mexican Music Summit. The singer/songwriter of corridos and romantic songs is also a musical arranger who traverses banda and norteño and whose songs have been in demand by other artists.



Adolfo Valenzuela and his brother Omar form the production team Twiins Enterprises have produced for many acts, including Jenni Rivera, El Chapo De Sinaloa, Banda Machos and Akwid, and are the go-to producers for regional Mexican remixes of pop and urban songs.

Joseph Vargas is the PD at KSJT-FM San Angelo, Texas, and the founder of PuroParty.net, a Web site dedicated to the regional Mexican scene. He's also the creator of the internationally syndicated radio show "La Hora Chida."

Erika Vidrio is heard on the radio as an on-air personality for Entravision's La Tricolor network, and her words are heard in songs by El Chapo De Sinaloa ("Maldito Licor"), Conjunto Primavera ("Sentí") and Sergio Vega ("Quien Es Usted," with Toby Sandoval). She's preparing her first album.

Showcases Highlight Top Acts At Regional Mexican Music Summit

By Ayala Ben-Yehuda

A Billboard showcase is a powerful platform for an up-and-coming artist to show what he or she can do in front of industry decision-makers. Here's an introduction to some of those performing at showcases and parties at this year's Billboard Regional Mexican Music Summit.

LILLIAN Y CAÑABRAVA is a nine-piece group, founded in 2007, that blends Colombian and Mexican sounds. Led by New York-born singer/songwriter Lillian Ham, the group incorporates trumpet, saxophone and trombone. A former singer with mariachi and tropical groups, Ham has shared the stage with Banda Machos and Leo Dan.

IVÁN distinguished himself as the first runner-up in the Telefutura/Univision Puerto Rico TV contest "Objetivo Fama." For his forthcoming pop-grupero album on Fonovisa, "Fantasía," Iván worked with legendary arranger/producer Homero Patrón and production team the Twiins.

JAZMIN LOPEZ released her self-titled debut of duranguense covers in June. She grew up in Texas, singing at nightclubs on both sides of the border and sharing the stage with Los Tigres del Norte and Alacranes Musical. She's managed by Pedro Avila and is a new Fonovisa Records artist, as well as host of MTV Tr3s' regional Mexican program "ReMexa."

EL POTRO DE SINALOA'S latest corridos album, "El Cargamento Del Diablo," was released on Fonovisa in August. Popular as a corridos and romantic artist, his hits include "El Vaso Derrama" and "Chuy Y Mauricio." He will perform at Fonovisa's 25th anniversary celebration Oct. 8.

CONJUNTO AZABACHE has released at least a dozen albums, the latest being "Una Nueva Pasion." The norteño group's members are from Chihuahua, Mexico, but are based in the Los Angeles area, from which they tour frequently on both sides of the border.

LOS HALCONES DE SAN LUIS are a norteño band from San Luis Potosi founded by the Niño family in 1985. The Frontera Music act has released at least 14 albums since 1989. The band will perform during the Oct. 8 happy hour.

Sony Music Latin artist/TV personality OLIVER OCHOA released his debut album, "Una Vez Mas," in May. Ochoa has written songs recorded by La Banda El Recodo, Valentín Elizalde, La Arrolladora Banda El Limón and El Coyote y Su Banda Tierra Santa, among others.

Los Angeles-based singer/songwriter CESAR BRIZUELA'S debut banda album on Morena Music is "Corazón Y Alma," produced by Fernando Cavazos. Brizuela has played L.A.'s Fiesta Broadway and Descarga at CityWalk, and he came in second in the 2006 Los Compositores songwriting competition.

HERMANOS HERRERA is made up of five brothers and a sister who play norteño, son huasteco, son jarocho and other regional Mexican styles. The Sonbros Records act has shared the stage with Banda El Recodo, Los Tigres del Norte, Julieta Venegas and other major acts.

SANTOS DIABLITO, aka Bruno Danzza, co-wrote Edith Marquez's single "Me Voy" with Armando Avila. His songs have been recorded by Jenni Rivera, Banda El Recodo and Valentín Elizalde and have been placed in telenovelas including "Verano De Amor" and "Atrevete A Soñar."

Eclectic L.A. group LA SANTA CECILIA has played festivals and museums and has had its music featured in the Showtime series "Weeds." The group traverses cumbia, bossa nova, bolero and tango, with Afro-Cuban percussion and jazz trumpet.

MARIO QUINTERO is lead vocalist/songwriter for Los Tucanes de Tijuana, whose hits include "Secuestro De Amor," "El Tucanazo," "Es Verdad," "Desde Que Te Amo," "El Amor Sonado," "Jugo A La Vida," "El Sinverguenza" and "El Virus Del Amor." He will make a special appearance at BMI's "Noche Mexicana" showcase Oct. 7.

Ohio-born singer LORYANA EL DIAMANTE DEL NORTE has sung for the Queen of England in English, but she began her Spanish-language career after meeting songwriter Maria Luisa Medina. Loryana will perform at the happy hour Oct. 8.

LOS CADETES DE LINARES are icons of the norteño genre, with more than three decades on Discos Ramex. Los Cadetes, who have two top 10s on Billboard's Top Regional Mexican Albums chart, released their album "Dos Vicios" last year. ••••

Fonovisa President Gustavo Lopez Discusses The Changing Regional Mexican Business And His Label's Central Role

By Leila Cobo

Fearless leader: GUSTAVO LOPEZ prepares his label for the future.

For more than two decades, Fonovisa Records has defined the regional Mexican marketplace in the United States and Mexico. Today, as part of Universal Music Latin Entertainment, Fonovisa and its sister label Disa Records have a dominant presence on Billboard's charts. This week, 10 titles in the top 20 of the Top Latin Albums chart are Fonovisa/Disa releases, as are 15 out of 20 titles on the Regional Mexican Albums list. Both labels are headed by Gustavo Lopez, who previously launched Machete, Universal's urban Latin label, and also headed up Universal's Latin distribution business. Lopez, born in Puerto Rico but raised in California, grew up surrounded by regional Mexican music when he worked for his brother's record store in North Hills, Calif.

You were most recently head of Machete, an urban Latin label. What's the biggest difference between that and running a regional Mexican label?

The main difference is that when I ran Machete most of the product breaking out internationally seemed to be Puerto Rican. On the regional Mexican side you have pockets of areas; you have movements coming out of Chicago like pasito duranguense. Or movements starting out in Guadalajara, Mazatlán and even Mexico City. There are different areas where the buzz is starting and you need to definitely expand your horizons in that arena and spot the different trends: You have to have a much wider view of the market.

How do you do that?

You have to make sure your A&R staff is very active. But at the end of the day I don't see a difference [from other genres]. In order to know what's happening you have to be in the clubs, in the streets, in the events, you have to know what's happening online. And people have a misconception that regional Mexican only appeals to older consumers. But when you go to the shows, the youth is very active.

You were appointed to this job when Universal purchased Fonovisa and Disa. What was your first order of action?

The company was in a very weak digital position. The digital concept had not been exploited. The artists were not aware of what opportunities were available to them from an online standpoint and how to generate revenue. And then, the company was for sale for a long time, and during that time a lot of the artists did not extend their deals with the company, or they'd done album-by-album deals, so we've been negotiating a lot of contracts. We recently redid [those for] Los Tigres [del Norte], Arrolladora Banda El Limón, El Chapo. Fifteen months later, we are still in renegotiating mode.

How do you face the challenge of having so many groups and their sales not where they used to be?

With the shrinking of the market and the economy, we've let go of some companies where the product was flowing through us. So, we've measured realistically how many albums we can release in a year, and we've cut back our releases by 50%. We've reduced the roster somewhat, but our core roster of artists is pretty much intact.

How many acts are on your roster?

We have more or less 90 acts on our roster. Sounds like a lot, but we cover such a large range of subgenres within regional Mexican, and it so happens that we are leaders in all of them whether in Mexico or the U.S.

What kind of artist are you signing?

We're focused on finding acts that are driving the youth movement. We also are looking for established artists that are open to change and where the relationship has a two-way benefit.

Most labels are asking artists for a percentage of ancillary income, including touring. Are you doing that?

Just about every single new contract has some sort of non-recording activity language where we seek revenues from other areas. We're not a management company but we do play a very important part in the development of our artists and we want to participate. We talk to the artists and management about the benefits of a closer relationship that goes beyond music sales. You'd be surprised at how open artists are to work with us in that area.

How is your digital business doing, and where do you want to see it?

Digital and new media is probably making up 25% of our income, versus 1% in 2007. Traditional physical sales still account for 65% of our income and another 10% is from other incomes like sponsorships, tie-ins, opportunities we bring to [artists] where we take a piece like any agency would. We're also trying to grow our licensing business. But the digital market has yet to explode. One of our biggest challenges is the fact that there are a large number of Latinos on prepaid phones and users have limitations on doing their purchases. ••••

Bye-bye to go-go: WALE

HIP-HOP | BY MARIEL CONCEPTION

Attention Overload

Will Wale Take Go-Go Mainstream?

Washington, D.C., MC Wale seems poised to make the leap to mainstream success. He's already built up a wealth of hipster cred, making mixtapes inspired by "Seinfeld" with Fader-approved DJ Nick Catchdubs and playing parties at wine bars packed with the young and the cool. But Wale could have a more complicated journey to mainstream success.

It's not for lack of effort. Last month Wale (born Wale Folarin) performed as part of the house band for the MTV Video Music Awards in New York, and he recently confirmed he will be joining Jay-Z, N*E*R*D and J. Cole for a stateside college tour this fall. In the last few months, he also appeared in an ad for the apparel line LRG and a commercial for Nike, inspired by his own "Nike Boots" song.

Now, Wale will be releasing his debut album, "Attention Deficit," Nov. 3 on Allido/Interscope Records. The album boasts appearances from Lady Gaga, Jazmine Sullivan, Gucci Mane and Bun B and production from Cool and Dre, Green Lantern, Scyence, longtime collaborator D.C.'s Best Kept Secret and mentor/Allido label head Mark Ronson.

So far, however, the major embrace hasn't translated into sales. Wale was best-known and acclaimed for incorporating go-go music, a local style that's little used outside D.C. But none of the singles released have been go-go tracks, and the new album's first single, "Chillin'," featuring Gaga, entered the Billboard Hot 100 at No. 99, where it remained for only a week before falling off. The second single, "World Tour," has yet to crack the charts.

Wale's manager Rich Kleiman says the records didn't get a reaction not because they didn't have the go-go sound Wale's known for, but because of a lack of radio support.

"Go-go is something Wale is heavily influenced by, but not something he is going to force on people. Still, the same way he introduced them to go-go, he wants to introduce to his fans all of the other sounds he's been influenced by," he says, adding that core fans shouldn't feel neglected. "Although I wish radio would have embraced the track in a bigger way—and we were disappointed it didn't get to the place on the charts we thought it would—we just wanted to put out the track that felt right now."

Wale agrees, stating the music he makes—whether go-go or not—is all part of his element. "I just make music I feel comfortable making, whether it's party music or offensive at times—whatever reflects what I'm feeling," he says.

Wale got his start passing out mixtapes in D.C. He was discovered by Ronson in 2007, and a few months after that, he signed with Ronson's Allido Records. He went on a U.K. tour with his label chief and "shortly after in 2008, I got signed to Interscope," he says.

> 'Wale's the kind of artist that does what he wants when he wants to. That's why the album is titled that way—it's like a focused confusion or an organized mess.'
> —RICH KLEIMAN, WALE'S MANAGER

Despite the lack of chart heat, Interscope is going ahead with the release of his album and launching a number of marketing initiatives. To roll out "Deficit," Wale will introduce in the fall an online video series that "follows his life on a day-to-day basis," marketing director Andrew Flad says. Wale also appears in 2K Sports' "NBA 2K10" videogame, available Oct. 6, as a playable character. Flad adds that Wale and his team are working out a deal for the new "DJ Hero" game that also launches this fall.

In addition to the Jay-Z tour, Wale, who recently took the stage for the VH1 Hip-Hop Honors in New York, will perform as-yet-unannounced one-off dates throughout the country starting in the coming weeks and will release a follow-up single, "Let It Loose" featuring Pharrell, which Kleiman says will give him the momentum he needs until the album's release.

"Wale's the kind of artist that does what he wants when he wants to. That's why the album is titled that way—it's like a focused confusion or an organized mess," Kleiman says. "People usually think, 'What's good for the brand?' But he isn't that type of artist. He realized he was ready to work with mainstream producers and artists but will never lose the backbone of who he is. And although he wants to be a star, he won't sacrifice his fans for it." ••••

>>>MADONNA BREAKS U.K. CHART RECORDS

Madonna matched Elvis Presley's U.K. record for a solo artist when her "Celebration" best-of (Warner Bros.) debuted at No. 1. Madonna and Elvis, with 11 U.K. No. 1s each, are now tied for second behind the Beatles, who have 15. According to U.K. Chart Co. data, Madonna has also spent more weeks at No. 1 in the market (29) than any other female solo artist.

>>>GENESIS RELEASES LIVE SET

As the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame vote draws near, first-time nominee Genesis has released a 10-disc boxed set titled "Genesis Live 1973-2007." Collecting a trophy at the Hall of Fame induction would create the potential for a reunion of the Peter Gabriel 1970-75 lineup, with Phil Collins on drums, that's been rumored for the past five years. Collins is reported to have a back condition that would prevent him from playing, however, making any reunion "a long shot," keyboardist Tony Banks says. Genesis is also planning a 2010 boxed set compiling the group's concert videos with some previously unreleased material as well as "home video" footage shot by Collins during the making of 1983's "Genesis" album.

>>>SPRINGSTEEN TO PLAY CLASSIC ALBUMS

Bruce Springsteen & the E Street Band will perform an entire album from their catalog each night of their five-show run this month at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J. Two nights will feature "Born to Run," another two will have "Born in the U.S.A.," and the last of the five will be "Darkness on the Edge of Town." The group is in the midst of a fall tour that wraps Nov. 22 in Buffalo, N.Y. In addition to the Giants Stadium shows, a "Born to Run" gig is set for Nov. 18 in Nashville. The band will also appear Oct. 29 at New York's Madison Square Garden as part of the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame's 25th-anniversary concert.

Kaleidoscopic Visions

DJ Tiësto Tries To Break Through Stateside

Dutch producer/DJ Tiësto is already ahead of many of his contemporaries: He has corporate sponsors, a Grammy Award nomination, a touring market that spans five continents and sales of more than 538,000 albums domestically, according to Nielsen SoundScan. But even though he's achieved success that usually eludes electronic artists, Tiësto has an even loftier goal in mind—cracking the North American mainstream. While his U.S. sales are nothing to scoff at, they're small potatoes next to his global sales—2.5 million-plus, according to his management.

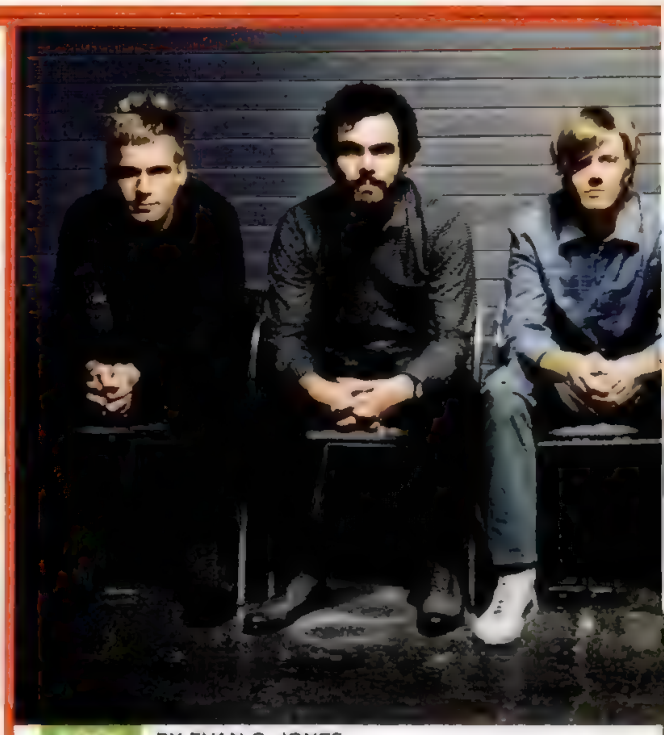
"Tiësto as an electronic artist may be seen as established; however, we all know how hard it has been for electronic artists to get the respect they deserve in the mainstream music world, particularly in North America," says Michael Cohen, Tiësto's co-manager at AM Only, his worldwide booking agency. "Considering he has played stadium shows in Europe, including a recent headlining show in London's Victoria Park for 25,000 people, there is still a long way to go for all of us in terms of replicating those achievements in North America."

Tiësto is hoping to achieve that success with "Kaleidoscope" (Ultra), his fourth studio album. It will be released Oct. 6 in the United States on Ultra and Oct. 5 elsewhere by Musical Freedom, a collaboration between Tiësto's management company, Complete Control, and PIAS. While it features collaborations with big names in art rock (Jónsi Birgisson from Sigur Rós), indie rock (Kele Okereke from Bloc Party) and even pop (Nelly Furtado, praising late-night partying on "Who Wants to Be Alone"), the collection never loses its essential Tiësto-ness: massive synth riffs, uplifting melodies and high drama.

For Ultra, the diversity of the collaborators means targeting a number of audiences. "We're connecting the music and message of 'Kaleidoscope' with the indie audience from Pitchfork to modern rock radio," Ultra president Patrick Moxey says. The label is also leveraging its large fan database with sales and Google Analytics data to focus the digital marketing campaign in key areas. "We're well aware that Tiësto needs special attention in Miami, for example, and we have a stepped micro-marketing campaign in that city to activate his fan base for street date," Moxey says. In-stores are scheduled for HMV in Toronto and Amoeba in Los Angeles, and Ultra has successfully sold the album in all of its U.S. retail accounts, including major chains for all 35 U.S. tour stops.

Tiësto, who turned 40 this year, will play a few large venues for the first time on the tour, which kicked off Sept. 24 in New York: Tsongas Arena in Boston (capacity: 7,800); Arrow Hall in Toronto (9,000); UCF Arena in Orlando, Fla. (10,000); Cohen Stadium in El Paso, Texas (11,000); and two shows at the Big Four Building in Calgary, Alberta (4,000).

"His touring profile has grown steadily and consistently, moving from sold-out club shows to sold-out theater shows to sold-out arenas now in some major markets," Cohen says. "As the size of venue has grown the ability to bring in Tiësto's signature production has grown with it, and I think that's the key to his continued success: investing in the live show." The Tiësto experience includes lasers, pyrotechnics, floor-to-ceiling video screens and an eye-popping customized DJ booth.



Heineken is onboard to sponsor some of the major-market shows. Tiësto is also working with Nokia in the Netherlands on a "performance and content partnership" and with Smirnoff and Manchester United Football Club on an Asia Pacific campaign. His long relationship with Armani Exchange will continue as well.

"In North America, we have done about all that an artist and brand could hope to achieve together, including a tour sponsorship, exclusive record release, clothing line and product endorsement," says Josh Neuman of Complete Control, Tiësto's worldwide management company. "We have started doing additional campaigns together in the U.K., China, Dubai and are exploring other territories to work on for 2010." ...

BURSTING THE 'BUBBLE'

Wind-Up Bets On Cartel's Comeback

In the spring of 2007, Conyers, Ga., act Cartel seemed like it was on the right track: Its debut had been upstreamed from indie the Militia Group to Epic and was selling briskly, and when it was presented with the opportunity to star in an MTV show, "Band in the Bubble," the group figured it would be a great next step.

Alas, that wasn't the case. The MTV program didn't achieve its intended result; the album recorded in the bubble, "Cartel," stiffed, selling less than 100,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

>>>T TIME AGAIN

Two-and-a-half years after releasing his Mercury Prize-nominated debut, "Panic Prevention," London-based singer/songwriter Jamie T—real name Jamie Treays—is back, hitting No. 2 on the United Kingdom's Official Charts Co (OCC) list with his second studio set, "Kings & Queens" (Virgin).

The 11-track album was released Sept. 7 in Europe and entered the U.K. chart a week later; it also reached the top 20 on the Australian Recording Industry Assn. albums chart. It makes its U.S. bow Oct. 6 on Astralwerks. "Panic Prevention" peaked at No. 4 on the U.K. chart and has racked up global sales of 250,000, according to the artist's London-based manager Jonathan Dickins.

Dickins calls the new set a progression from "Panic Prevention," being eclectic in the music it refers to "but believable in everywhere it goes."

The new set mixes lovelorn acoustic ballads, feisty punk rock and dancehall rhythms with the artist's distinctly British, fast-paced MC vocal style.

Its U.K. arrival was preceded by the four-track EPs "Sticks 'N' Stones" and "Chaka Demus," which both cracked the OCC top 30. Each EP's title track appears on the album, while a third EP is set to be released in November following a 14-date U.K. tour beginning

Popping fresh: CARTEL

(The band's first album, "Chroma," sold 250,000.) Cartel was released from its contract with Epic and found itself on the market.

But the band got a second chance, courtesy of Wind-up Records president Ed Vetri. The label will release its new album, "Cycles," Oct. 20, as part of a "270" deal with the band. Under the terms of the agreement, Wind-up has the rights to collect revenue from album sales, merchandise and touring. For Vetri, who says he's been keeping track of the band since 2004, this was the perfect opportunity.

"Our lawyer had discussed it with one of the A&R guys at Wind-up," Cartel manager Chris Black says. "They were the first people to know directly that we were free agents and they were on it after that. They wanted it right there and then."

Vetri says his first goal was to give Cartel the time and space to make the record he thinks it could have made all along. Both of its earlier albums were recorded in less than a month, and Vetri says he believed Cartel could create an album that would make fans forget its reality TV foray if the band was allowed to go slow.

"I think [lead singer] Will [Pugh] needed time to find himself again and support to write great songs, which he ultimately did," Vetri says. "It was a long process; they were in the studio for about a year."

Pugh says, "They put us in their studio, gave us the time and allowed us to produce our own record. Listening to the record now, it's the most focused, well-organized and best representation of our band that we've had so far."

Like the group's last two releases, "Cycles" has plenty of hooks but they're tighter and more sophisticated, a by-product of the band's ability to take time and refine its work. The bass-heavy track "Deep South" pays tribute to the group's Southern pride. ("Go and get my bones/Bring them to the Deep South/Somewhere they can thaw out.") The closing song "Retrograde" contains sweeping vocals and big pop-punk instrumentation, while slower, ballad-type songs ("Only You," "It Still Remains") show the band's emotional depth.

Cartel reconnected with fans while in the studio by posting on Twitter, MySpace and Facebook. The band also did a quick tour with All Time Low and We the Kings as the recording process was winding down. It's planning to hit the road this fall to tour in support of "Cycles" with This Providence, the Summer Set, Bigger Lights and the Dares. Other marketing plans include giveaways and webisodes through the group's social networking sites and an appearance on Fearless TV Oct. 26. The first single, "Let's Go," is being serviced to rock radio.

Vetri has high expectations for the group. "Will has an absolutely amazing voice," he says. "Once we can get the songs out there and his live performance grows, that's when we'll ultimately bring them to a platinum-plus record." ••••

>>>BLUE LAKES

With Scottish pop-rock act Deacon Blue on indefinite hiatus, singer/chief songwriter Ricky Ross and vocalist Lorraine Macintosh decided the time was right for a new venture.

The pair, married for 19 years, are founding members of Deacon Blue, which enjoyed five U.K. top five albums between 1989 and 1994 including the chart-toppers "When the World Knows Your Name" (CBS, 1989) and "Our Town—The Greatest Hits" (Columbia, 1994).

They opted to record their first work as Macintosh Ross in Los Angeles with Daniel Lanois' regular production partner Mark Howard, and the resulting album, "The Great Lakes" (Cooking Vinyl), adds an element of Americana to their Celtic roots.

"We wanted to detach [this record] from some of the history of the band, which is one of the reasons it was recorded in America," says Cooking Vinyl's London-based director of business development Joe Cokell. "There are some great Nashville [session] players on the record, which will broaden its appeal."

The act is signed worldwide to Cooking Vinyl, which released the album Sept. 28 in Europe. Cokell expects a U.S. release "once we've been built a platform in the U.K. and Europe." Macintosh Ross will play U.K. shows in November, booked by Asgard. Ross is published by Warner/Chappell; Macintosh is copyright control. —Steve Adams

>>>CLEAN LIVING

After just four studio albums since forming in 1978, New Zealand alt-rock act the Clean recently released a new set. "Pitchfork described them as the 'Halley's Comet of indie rock,' which is a pretty good description," says Ben Howe, label manager at the act's current home, Auckland-based Arch Hill Recordings.

The latest sighting comes with "Mister Pop," released Sept. 7 in New Zealand and Sept. 8 in the United States on Merge; Morr Music issued the album Sept. 14 in Europe. Publishing is with Mushroom Music.

The Clean was the most influential act to emerge from the New Zealand indie label Flying Nun. It scored a few domestic hits and was name-checked by bands like Yo La Tengo, Guided by Voices and Pavement. The band split in 1983 but reformed in 1988 and has reconvened every four to five years since, while the members continue solo careers.

The new album, Howe says, has "still got plenty of their old instrumental freakouts," but as befits its title, it's slightly poppier than previous outings.

The Clean last toured in 2007-08, but new dates haven't been booked yet. "There's a lot of demand for them to tour and they probably will at some stage," Howe says. "But they tend to do things in their own time." —John Ferguson

6 QUESTIONS
with CHESTER BENNINGTON

by EVAN C. JONES

As the lead singer of the multimillion-selling band Linkin Park, Chester Bennington helped define the rap-metal sound of the early '90s. But as his career was ascending, his life was falling apart: Bennington was heavily involved in drugs and spent some nights wondering whether he would make it to the next day. Luckily, he survived and used the turmoil to inspire his new project, Dead by Sunrise. Bennington and his bandmates—Orgy members Amir Derakh and Ryan Shuck—will release "Out of Ashes" Oct. 13 on Warner Bros.

1 Can you explain the meaning behind the band's name?

"Dead by Sunrise" really sums up the kind of lifestyle I was leading when we began working on the record. I was partying a lot; I was drinking heavily; I was using a lot of illegal substances, and it wasn't fun. It got to the point where it was really out of control, so the name of the band comes from that feeling of literally not knowing if you're going to make it to the next day.

2 How is Dead by Sunrise different from Linkin Park?

The main difference between them is that Linkin Park was known for taking a more metal approach and incorporating lots of hip-hop beats behind that. Dead by Sunrise has a lot of grungy, punky, straightforward rock elements mixed with an alternative rock, melodic sensibility, as well as some electro-alternative pop stuff.

3 You also did some production work on the new album. What lessons did you learn being on the other side of the board?

Being involved with all aspects of the process opened up a lot of creativity within me, and I started writing songs like a madman. I was writing eight to 10 songs a year before. I had a lot of ideas but really not that many great songs, and they came in spurts. Whereas now, I could write probably 100 songs a year. It's really kick-started a lot of energy in me that was lying dormant for a little while.

4 What kind of tour plans do you have?

The idea now is to go out and really start playing small shows. That could mean playing in front of a couple hundred people. My goal is to really build a fan base the grass-roots way: Go out and hit the road and play small shows and get fans who just want to hear us play.

5 What promotion are you doing for the new album? Are you targeting Linkin Park fans or a different crowd?

I don't know if Linkin Park fans will like Dead by Sunrise. Some people may actually like Dead by Sunrise and not like Orgy or Linkin Park. I do have an advantage in the fact that Linkin Park is huge, and there are lots of people who are fans of mine, and fans of Linkin Park, and they're going to come see it because it's tied to Linkin Park, and that's all they care about. But I'm not relying on that alone.

6 You've worked with a wide range of artists. Is there anyone else you'd like to collaborate with in the future?

If there was somebody I had to choose right now, it would be Chris Cornell. And Slash and I have been kicking around the idea of working on a song together for quite some time; we just can never seem to connect at the right time. ••••

BEBEL GILBERTO

All in One

Producers: various

Verve

Release Date: Sept. 29

Despite Bebel Gilberto's Brazilian musical bloodlines (her father is João Gilberto and her mother is Miúcha), she didn't achieve widespread notoriety until she left the South American country. Her 2000 international debut release, "Tanto Tempo," produced in London, put Gilberto on the world music map. Her latest album and Verve debut, "All in One," is something of a return to Brazil, conceptually speaking. Collaborating with artists like Daniel Jobim, Didi Gutman and Carlinhos Brown, Gilberto offers a Euro/Brazil mix of tunes. The set features several strongly tropical numbers, like the gentle "Cancao de Amor" and a fine cover of her father's original bossa nova classic "Bim Bom." Her rendition of Stevie Wonder's "The Real Thing," on the other hand, is insubstantial compared with simpler efforts, including the dark colors of "Secret," the lovely ballad "Port Antonio" and her spirited cover of the Carmen Miranda nugget "Chica Chica Boom Chic."—PVV

PATTY LOVELESS

Mountain Soul II

Saguaro Road

Release Date: Sept. 29

Patty Loveless has an innate soulfulness that can't be taught, bought or won on a reality show. That's one of the reasons—along with sterling musicianship and inspired song selection—why her new album, "Mountain Soul II," is a must-have for fans of Loveless and roots music alike. When she sings, "There's no place so lonely as being half over you" on the track "Half Over You," listeners feel the same belief in her lyrics as they did when listening to Vince Gill sing "Never knew lonely till I met you" 20 years ago on the song "Never Knew Lonely." The stark tune "Diamond in My Crown," which finds Loveless accompanied by Emmylou Harris and a pump organ, is as pure and aurally fulfilling. Meanwhile, the gospel trio of "Working on a Building" (with Del and Ronnie McCoury), "Friends in Gloryland" (featuring Gill and Rebecca Lynn Howard) and "(We Are All) Children of Abraham" provides the album's spiritual center.—KT

TOKIO HOTEL

Humanoid

Producers: various

Cherrytree/Interscope

Release Date: Oct. 6

It's probably unwise to assume that "Darkside of the Sun," the second track from the German band Tokio Hotel's second international set, "Humanoid," references the famous Pink Floyd album with which it almost shares a title. After all, little about Tokio Hotel suggests the group's young members feel any connection to the classic rock canon. Led by elaborate-haired frontman Bill Kaulitz, the band looks to Depeche Mode the way guitar groups regard Led Zeppelin. With its whirring synth riffs ("Noise"), pumping arena-emo grooves ("Pain of Love") and liberal use of Auto-Tune ("Hey You"), "Humanoid" is no less appealingly shiny than its 2007 stateside debut, "Scream." But with the exception of the song "Automatic," an instantly catchy chunk of bubble-grunge perfection, it does have fewer killer melodies, which allows more of your brain to focus on Kaulitz's lyrics. That's a dubious advantage: The song "Dogs Unleashed" sounds an awful lot like he's singing, "We are dogs in heat."—MW

MICHAEL BUBLÉ

Crazy Love

Producers: various

143/Reprise

Release Date: Oct. 9

There's always been a bit of crazy in the way Canadian crooner Michael Bublé has structured his repertoire, love songs and otherwise; he has the standards down, but he's certainly not trapped in the Great American Songbook. The curveballs on Bublé's fourth studio release, "Crazy Love," give the album some additional cheek, whether it's the finger-snapping take on the Eagles' "Heartache Tonight," the samba-flavored groove of Ron Sexsmith's "Whatever It Takes" or Dinah Washington and Brook Benton's "Baby (You've Got What It Takes)," a slinky R&B romp with Sharon Jones & the Dap-Kings. He also holds his own on a treatment of the Ella Fitzgerald staple "Cry Me a River" (which sounds like a potential James Bond movie theme) and the Van Morrison-written title track. Meanwhile, the single "Haven't Met You Yet"—one of two Bublé writing credits on the album—is a Merseybeat pastiche that seems about to break into "All You Need Is Love" at any minute. "Crazy Love" is another step in Bublé's creation of his own kind of songbook, and there's nothing necessarily crazy about that.—GG

AVETT BROTHERS

I and Love and You

Producer: Rick Rubin

American Recordings

Release Date: Sept. 29

On past albums, the Avett Brothers' greatest attribute has been their ability to lure comfortable yet elegant fireplace melodies from just a handful of guitars and one DNA strand. But higher stakes are called for on their major-label debut, "I and Love and You"—and the brothers have responded with nothing less than a game-changer. The North Carolina-based band has smartly obliterated and redrawn its folk-punk/grunge-roots history, first declaring its relocation to Brooklyn on the glowing title track, and then swinging for the fences with a finger-painted rave-up ("Kick Drum Heart"). Meanwhile, the song "Heart Full of Doubt, Road Full of Promise" is a swelling epic with a title to match, and "The Perfect Space" is an Elton John-like piano ballad. Packed front to back with lyrical treats and lovely sonic touches (thanks to producer Rick Rubin), "I and Love and You" may be one of the major labels' best pieces of news this fall.—JV

ALICE IN CHAINS

Black Gives Way to Blue

Producers: Nick Raskulinecz, Alice in Chains

Virgin Records

Release Date: Sept. 29

Alice in Chains singer Layne Staley is gone but hardly forgotten—at least not as an integral component of the band's murky, melodic brand of hard rock. The quartet returns 14 years after its last new studio album (and seven years after Staley's death), with an 11-track set that sounds like it could well have been recorded in the same session as the 1995 "Alice in Chains." New singer William DuVall's voice boasts the same kind of cadence and weight as Staley's, and more importantly his vocal blend with guitarist Jerry Cantrell ensures that that integral harmonic trademark remains intact. So does Alice in Chains' dark countenance, from the twisting opening of the song "All Secrets Known" to the sinewy groove of the first single, "Check My Brain." The droning "Private Hell" takes the listener into a trance-like state, while the album-closing title track is a salute to Staley that features Elton John on piano.—GG

ROSANNE CASH

The List

Producers: John Leventhal, Rick DePofi

Manhattan Records

Release Date: Oct. 6

Grieving the loss of a loved one may yield a harvest of creativity. In Rosanne Cash's case, the 2003 death of her father, Johnny Cash, inspired the heartfelt originals on her 2006 release "Black Cadillac." The late country legend's memory also largely informs Cash's new album, "The List"—sublime renderings of tunes her dad considered essential American gems. Cash not only infuses love into her delivery on the collection but also proves herself a supreme song stylist. Guest vocalists contribute gracefully to these country classics, highlighted by Bruce Springsteen singing into the marrow of the midtempo track "Sea of Heartbreak" and Elvis Costello spicing up "Heartaches by the Number." But the spotlight is rightfully on Cash, who sails gently through "Miss the Mississippi and You" while deliciously strolling through Hank Snow's "I'm Movin' On." She ends the acoustic affair with a heartrending interpretation of the Carter Family's "Bury Me Under the Weeping Willow."—DO

Scars

Producers: Felix Buxton, Simon Ratcliffe

Ultra/XL

Release Date: Sept. 22

If Basement Jaxx has a flaw, it's the group's tendency to overdo: too many of the craziest sounds you've ever heard happening at once, at too high a volume, surrounding one defenseless vocal line. But the U.K. production duo has found a happy medium between total sonic freedom and popwise efficiency on its fifth album, "Scars." The release is a study of balanced brilliance, a junkyard carnival of found sounds and international influences. The irresistible start-stop title track features a Kelis vocal over a gothic choir, chopped into syncopated bits. The song "Twerk" recalls Basement Jaxx's jump-up mix of N*E*R*D's "She Wants to Move," while the track "Saga" takes Santigold into ska territory—with a cartoon-like ghoulishness, a la Scooby-Doo. Crooner Sam Sparro leads the album standout "Feelings Gone" with a faithfully soulful vocal over a kinetic dance rhythm that would make Annie Lennox proud. But by closing the song with unadorned strings, Basement Jaxx seems to be finding feeling in its new efficiency.—KM

Music Inspired by More Than a Game

Harvey Mason Music/Zone 4/Streamline Media/Geffen

Release Date: Sept. 29

The soundtrack to the sports documentary "More Than a Game," a coming-of-age story about friendship and loyalty among five young basketball players in the face of adversity, is much like the film: inspiring, with a star-studded lineup. Most of the songs exude a sense of motivation, including Mary J. Blige's heartfelt "Stronger" and Jay-Z's nostalgic "History." Other tracks, like Rich Boy's braggadocios on "Top of the World" and the encouraging "If You Dream," help lift the story of the fab five (led by future NBA superstar LeBron James), whose high school team went on to win its national championship. The album's standout track —and the one that captures most of the film's emotion—is the ambitious "Forever," featuring Drake, Lil Wayne, Kanye West and Eminem. Over the double-speed drums and horn-laden production, Drake harmonizes, "It may not mean nothing to y'all/But understand nothing was done for me/So I don't plan on stopping at all/I want this shit forever."—MC

JULIAN CASABLANCAS

11th Dimension (4:02)

Producer: Jason Lader

Writer: J. Casablancas

Publisher: Julian Casablancas Publishing (ASCAP)

RCA/Cult

Unabashedly retro, Casio-style keyboards kick off the first single from Strokes frontman Julian Casablancas' anticipated solo debut album, "Phrazes for the Young." Although those first notes sound like they should be playing during the opening credits of a cheesy B-movie from the '80s, Strokes fans can set aside their worst fears, because Casablancas proves that he isn't one to dive headfirst into synth-pop without a sense of irony. On "11th Dimension," the singer redirects kitschy pop into the arena of "Achtung Baby"-era U2, implementing a Teutonic boogie under his smooth, monotone croon. He sings, "I just nod, I've never been so good at shaking hands," but with this ultra-catchy, pop-rock gem, Casablancas shows that he can get hipsters shaking on the dancefloor.—RH

After lending her vocals to Flo Rida's "Right Round," Ke$ha offers her own fun and frivolous ode to a wild night out. "TiK ToK" finds the 22-year-old singing teasingly about excess pleasures, from drinking ("Ain't got a care in the world but I got plenty of beer") to men ("We kick 'em to the curb unless they look like Mick Jagger"). In case that weren't enough, Ke$ha also alludes to brushing her teeth with a bottle of Jack Daniel's and name-drops Diddy, who provides a quick cameo for good measure. The song is a love letter to DJs everywhere, with hand claps that build to a crescendo of pure, infectious dance-pop. Ke$ha's debut album is due in late 2009, and with this first solo effort, the singer reveals a knack for getting the party started.—KP

ALEJANDRO SANZ FEATURING ALICIA KEYS

Looking for Paradise (4:34)

Producers: Alicia Keys, Tommy Torres

Writers: A. Sanz, A. Keys, K. Dean, T. Torres

Publisher: Gazul Productions Warner/Chappell Music Spain

The raspy urgency of Alejandro Sanz's voice has acted as a lovely complement to female belters in the past. The Spanish singer lent heft to Shakira's 2005 hit, "La Tortura," and this time around, his duet partner is Alicia Keys, whose voice also suits his nicely. Kudos to Sanz and Keys for stepping out of their comfort zones and going back and forth in each other's languages. It's refreshing to hear them stretch like that, when they could've simply stuck with Spanish or English. Not that there's much more risk-taking to be found in "Looking for Paradise." The hook consists largely of Keys reprising her "uh-oh, uh-oh" chants from "No One." Like a cool drink of water on a summer day, the song's breezy acoustic guitar riffs and earnest lyrics about looking for human connection are pleasant, but their taste is easily forgotten.—ABY

With this year's top "American Idol" finalists nearing the release of their solo debuts, it might be easy to forget that season seven's Jason Castro is also putting out his own on Nov. 17. Luckily, his first single is strong enough to redirect some attention toward him. It's a sprightly folk-pop number that reminisces about the puppy-love stage of a relationship, as Castro asks his girlfriend to revisit that idyllic phase and even pokes fun at its inherent silliness. "We'll fall disgustingly fast, and we'll stop hanging out with friends/And they'll be so offended," he sings. Those familiar with his goofy, somewhat haphazard nature on "Idol" will be happy to know that Castro has stepped up his vocal game considerably on his solo material, without losing the carefree spirit that made him such a fan favorite.—MH

JOHN MAYER

Producers: John Mayer, Steve Jordan

Writer: J. Mayer

Publishers: Sony/ATV Tunes, Specific Harm Music (ASCAP)

Columbia

John Mayer's debut single off his forthcoming "Battle Studies" album finds the singer/songwriter asking a rather daring question: "Who says I can't get stoned?" This is clearly a departure for the artist, from both his radio-friendly singles and heartthrob image. "Who Says" balances Mayer's signature velvety tone with a more stripped-down, folk-inspired arrangement. The lyrics are about yearning for the freedom to define and redefine himself by, among other things, traveling solo, turning off his telephone and pursuing old flames. Mayer may not be speaking in grandiose terms about changing the world or marveling over a woman's beauty, but maybe that's the point. As the singer himself puts it, "Who says I can't be free, from all of the things that I used to be?"—CB

RISING STAR

Jason Derulo's 'Whatcha Say' Ignites Beluga Heights/Warner Bros. Venture

On the strength of powerful storytelling and the clever use of sampling, "Whatcha Say," the debut single from singer/songwriter Jason Derulo, is burning up mainstream radio. The song has cracked the upper tier of the Billboard Hot 100, currently sitting at No. 5; it's also No. 2 on Hot Digital Songs with 775,000 copies sold, according to Nielsen SoundScan. While the track's chorus puts an electro-pop spin on a sample of Imogen Heap's 2005 song "Hide and Seek," Derulo displays vocal skills that have pegged him as an exciting new artist to watch.

"The sample was just magical, and the song itself is so real," the 20-year-old Derulo says. "I've been singing and dancing since I was 5 years old. So to see everyone's reactions and hear them singing along is incredible."

Before Derulo established himself as a solo artist, the Miami native spent his youth studying opera, theater and ballet, as well as different musical genres. He wrote his first song when he was 8 years old. After attending performing arts schools and honing his talents as a singer and dancer, Derulo won the grand prize on the 2006 season finale of the TV show "Showtime at the Apollo."

Although Derulo's abilities as a performer were still developing, his understanding of song structure helped him become a polished writer and land a deal at Rondor Music Publishing. "As soon as I heard his music, I was a fan," says Rondor senior VP Kevin Hall, who signed Derulo. "We're always looking for songwriters who can cut through everything around them, and I felt like his material had that lasting quality."

Despite the opportunity to write tracks for artists like Lil Wayne, Pitbull and Cassie, Derulo was intent on becoming a solo performer. "It was killing me," he says. "I had a huge attachment to the songs I was writing, but I had to give them up to make a quick buck. Being in music, I was just hoping something would happen, that somebody would notice me."

Among those who noticed the would-be artist were producer/label executive J.R. Rotem and "American Idol" judge/Warner Bros. senior VP of A&R Kara DioGuardi. Rotem, the multiplatinum producer responsible for hits like Sean Kingston's "Beautiful Girls" and Rihanna's "S.O.S.," realized Derulo's potential after the two recorded six songs together on the night of their first meeting. Rotem signed Derulo to his Beluga Heights imprint through Warner Bros. Records and also signed on to produce the artist's debut album.

The use of the "Hide and Seek" sample for the chorus of "Whatcha Say" may have been a collective decision between Derulo and Rotem. But the singer's brother, who called Derulo right after his girlfriend left him, inspired the song's heartbroken lyrics. "He told me, 'If she gave me another chance, I'd be the man she needed me to be,' " Derulo says. "People experience something like this every single day. The song goes through feelings that are common in a lot of relationships, and I think that's why people are connecting to it."

Now Derulo's brother is engaged to the same woman, and "Whatcha Say" has clocked more than 12 million listens on MySpace. Derulo will likely release another single by year's end as well as appear as himself in MTV Films' "Turn the Beat Around" early next year. He will also spend the fall performing club dates across the United States.

While the release of his debut album isn't expected until first-quarter 2010, Derulo has written and recorded hundreds of songs for it. He says the release will be well worth the wait.

"I really don't feel any pressure to follow up 'Whatcha Say' because that song is just an appetizer for the album," he says. "After working so hard and spending every night in the studio until 6 in the morning, it's exciting to see it all come to fruition. I can't wait for the world to hear more."

KINGS OF MULTIPLE FORMATS

The Kings of Leon continue their multiformat march. The RCA quartet's "Use Somebody" rises 3-1 on Billboard's Mainstream Top 40 chart. In addition to hitting No. 1 on Alternative, Triple A and Adult Top 40, the song becomes the first track to top all four tallies since 2004-05 when Green Day's "Boulevard of Broken Dreams" ruled those lists. Only two other groups before Green Day and Kings of Leon have achieved this feat since 1996, when all four airplay charts first co-existed (Alternative launched in 1988, Mainstream Top 40 in 1992 and Triple A and Adult Top 40 in 1996): the Goo Goo Dolls' "Slide" (1998-99) and Sugar Ray's "Every Morning" (1999). —Gary Trust

Still Doing His Thing

Luke Bryan To Headline Own Tour As Second Capitol Album Bows

Rising star Luke Bryan isn't afraid of a sophomore slump. "When you stop writing songs, that's when you back yourself into a corner," the singer/songwriter says. "As long as you've got 100 songs written, the pressure's off. I just focus on making sure I've got the songs and go from there."

Bryan's 2007 album "I'll Stay Me" spawned two top 10 airplay singles, including the top five "All My Friends Say," and has sold 262,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. His second album, "Doin' My Thing" (Capitol Nashville), is due Oct. 6.

The first single "Do I," which speaks to the challenges of maintaining a marital relationship, is No. 17 on Billboard's Hot Country Songs chart after 17 weeks on the chart. Bryan co-wrote the song with Lady Antebellum's Charles Kelley and Dave Haywood.

Joel Burke, PD at country KYGO Denver, says the song has "powerful, compelling and relatable lyrics. There was immediate reaction when we started playing it, and it has since proven to be one of our biggest songs over the past six weeks."

The album also includes a cover of OneRepublic's "Apologize." Bryan recalls doing the song "on a whim one night in Athens, Ga. The crowd just flipped out, so we kept doing it."

How a song plays in front of concert crowds helped Bryan shape his new album. "I'm more sure about who I am and know what songs I'm going to like to perform on the road day in and day out," he says. "There are songs on my first album that I've never performed live. Any song that's on this new album is a song that I could do live and be proud doing it."

Bryan, who has toured as an opening act for Kenny Chesney and Brooks & Dunn, will headline his own monthlong tour beginning Oct. 30 in Jacksonville, Fla. The new duo Fast Ryde will open the shows. His producer Jeff Stevens' son, Jody, is part of the duo. "To see the look on their faces when I asked them to come out was worth it all," Bryan says. "They are fired up."

The singer will also kick off his Farm Tour Oct. 5 at a plantation outside of Statesboro, Ga. It's an opportunity for Bryan—who grew up on a rural Georgia peanut farm—to give back to charity organizations in local farming communities. He envisions eventually performing a series of shows across the country annually.

"We hope to build it to the point where we can dedicate a portion of each year to the Farm Tour and do 20 shows," he says. "It would be our own little festival." ••••

A SOUTHERN HOMECOMING

"Reunited," the new album by the Gaither Vocal Band released Sept. 8 through Gaither Music Group/EMI Christian Music Distribution, signals both a homecoming for band members Mark Lowry, David Phelps and Michael English and a new chapter in the life of the veteran Southern gospel group.

"It's like hearing these songs for the first time," band founder Bill Gaither says. "[My wife] Gloria and I were smiling as we listened. You always envision great singers singing your material, and these are great singers."

Lowry, Phelps and English rejoined Gaither and Wes Hampton to record a collection of beloved hits written by the Gaithers. The album features such classics as "Because He Lives" and "He Touched Me." The result: "Reunited" this week enters Billboard's Top Christian Albums chart at No. 3 and the Billboard 200 at No. 67.

Besides veterans Lowry, Phelps and English, previous band members include Christian music luminaries Larnelle Harris, Russ Taff, Steve Green and Guy Penrod. After Penrod and Marshall Hall left last year, Gaither decided to revamp the group.

"We could have found young guys coming up as we've done in the past," says Gaither, whose Gaither Music Group empire includes the successful "Homecoming" series of CD/DVDs, concert tours, record labels and publishing. "But I talked to [Lowry, Phelps and English] and they told me, 'It was fun; we were just tired and wanted a break.' When they came back, it was magic."

The revamped lineup spurred a broader marketing approach for the new album. "With the additions of Mark, Michael and David, the band had larger, mass-market appeal," says Paul Sizelove, VP of sales and marketing for Gaither Music Group. To tap into that appeal, the company launched retail campaigns with Wal-Mart, Amazon and iTunes. The CBA—the trade association for Christian retail—also worked the project through key positioning at many national and independent accounts.

TV also helped spur sales with advertising on networks like GAC, RFD, INSP, Daystar and Gospel Music Channel. A strong presale campaign on Gaither.com was supplemented by a feature in the Gaither Catalog Collection that was sent to the Gaither mailing list.

Lowry, Phelps and English will continue to record and perform solo. However, the Gaither Vocal Band will be their priority. "My 13 years with the Gaithers the first time was wonderful, and I'm thrilled to be back," says Lowry, who exited in 2001. "I'm singing with David and Michael again, probably my two favorite singers. Then Wes Hampton is blowing me out of the water every night. He's amazing. But standing there again with a legend [like Gaither], how much fun could that be?" —Deborah Evans Price

SALUTING A LEGEND

What do Mary J. Blige, Joe, Musiq Soulchild and the Clark Sisters have in common? They're among the stars saluting the legendary group Maze on "Silky Soul Music . . . An All-Star Tribute to Maze Featuring Frankie Beverly."

Rounding out the impressive lineup reinterpreting such Maze classics as "Before I Let Go" and "Back in Stride" are Mint Condition, Kem, Ledisi, Raheem DeVaughn, Kevon Edmonds, Avant, J. Moss and Kierra Sheard. Produced through Brantera Music Group, the 10-song CD was released Sept. 29. Since its digital release Aug. 25, the project has sold 6,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

Grammy Award nominee Rex Rideout produced nine of the tracks, while Grammy-winning modern gospel guru Donald Lawrence helmed the Clark Sisters' contribution, "I Wanna Thank You." Leading the project's charge is the first single, "Can't Get Over You," covered by Joe. The song is No. 27 on Billboard's Adult R&B chart.

"Frankie Beverly is a beloved R&B original," Rideout says, "and straying too far from that would have been sacrilege. So we kept close to the original sound and let the artists' interpretations bring fresh, new perspectives to his work."

"This tribute has really touched my father," adds Anthony Beverly, who heads Brantera Music Group and served as an executive producer on the album. "This project gives him and Maze their just due."

Maze got its break in the early '70s as the backing band for Marvin Gaye. Signed to Capitol and later Warner Bros., the group racked up 30 hit singles and 12 albums. The tribute CD, in fact, borrows part of its title from Maze's 1989 Warner Bros. album.

To drive awareness about the album, Frankie and Anthony have appeared on syndicated radio shows hosted by Steve Harvey, Tom Joyner and Michael Baisden. A video of the Joe single is being serviced to outlets as Brantera gears up to promote the Clark Sisters' track at gospel radio. Also in the wings: Bonus footage of the participating acts discussing the album and Maze's enduring influence will be part of a special CD/DVD edition. —Gail Mitchell

Billboard CHARTS

THE HOT BOX

A WEEKLY ROUNDUP OF NOTABLE CHART ACHIEVEMENTS

...AND MORE

A bevy of new releases is vying to crash into the top 10 of next week's Billboard 200. Leading the pack are Mariah Carey's "Memoirs of an Imperfect Angel" and "Brand New Eyes" by Paramore (above), both of which are gunning for No. 1 with perhaps as many as 160,000-170,000 copies each.

COMEDY JOINT

Larry the Cable Guy extends his record as the artist with the most No. 1s on Top Comedy Albums as "Tailgate Party" becomes his sixth chart-topper on the list. His total of No. 1s is double the number earned by his nearest competitor, Dane Cook.

ROCK RELICS

A pair of rock bands boast career achievements on the Billboard 200. Three Days Grace (above) and Brand New both notch their highest-charting albums. Three Days Grace also earns its best sales week, starting at No. 3 with 200,000 sold.

CHART BEAT

A staple of AC and Latin radio since his arrival in 1992, Jon Secada makes his first appearance on Billboard's Jazz charts. "Expressions" enters Top Traditional Jazz Albums at No. 18 and Top Jazz Albums at No. 39. The set includes standards and new versions of some of his hits.

What does Madonna's "Celebration" have in common with "You'll See" and "American Life"? They are the only three tracks she has placed on the Hot 100 Songs chart. "Celebration" bows at No. 45.

The late Dan Fogelberg appears on the Billboard 200 for the first time since 1993. "Love in Time," recorded before his death in 2007, debuts at No. 117.

Read Chart Beat every week at billboard.com/chartbeat.

Pearl Jam's Back On Top; Holidays Are Coming

Has it really been 13 years since Pearl Jam was last at No. 1 on the Billboard 200?

The veteran band bows atop the chart with its not-quite retailer-exclusive "Backspacer," selling 189,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. It's the group's fourth chart-topper and first since 1996. That's when "No Code" landed in the penthouse with 367,000 sold. Between "Code" and "Backspacer," the band placed four other sets within the top 10. Pearl Jam's last studio album, its 2006 self-titled J Records set, debuted and peaked at No. 2 with 279,000.

The new album—its first not released on a major label—is sold exclusively in the United States through Target, iTunes, Pearl Jam's Web site and independent retailers. It arrived off-cycle on Sunday, Sept. 20.

While SoundScan's tracking week runs Monday through Sunday, not all the merchants that report to SoundScan supply data reflecting the same time frame. Target's reporting week is Sunday to Saturday. SoundScan also synched up Pearl Jam's first-day sales from iTunes, the band's Web site and the indie stores with Target's reporting week.

"Backspacer" is Pearl Jam's 30th charting album on the Billboard 200. That sum includes nine studio sets, a greatest-hits package, a B-sides compilation and 19 live releases.

'TIS THE SEASON: It may only be October, but this week Billboard's Top Holiday Albums chart returns to the magazine (page 92) and Billboard.biz.

The tally lists the week's best-selling seasonal releases, including traditional Christmas albums as well as Hanukkah and Kwanzaa sets. The holiday chart will be compiled by Nielsen SoundScan until January 2010.

The annual parade of holiday albums begins Oct. 6 with "Now That's What I Call a Country Christmas." It's followed Oct. 13 by Sugarland's "Gold and Green," David Archuleta's "Christmas From the Heart" and Bob Dylan's "Christmas in the Heart."

Further down the road, Andrea Bocelli's "My Christmas," out Nov. 3, seems to be the biggest of the holiday crowd, though I'll reserve guesses on whether it'll do Josh Groban "Noel"-like numbers.

The holiday chart also houses quasi-holiday sets like Enya's 2008 release "And Winter Came . . ." (which leads this week's chart) and Sting's "If on a Winter's Night" (due Oct. 27). The latter features folk songs, lullabies and carols.

WITH 'FRIENDS' LIKE THESE: Joshua Bell's "At Home With Friends," released Sept. 29, might be the most covert holiday album of the season.

The collection, which gives listeners an impression of what it might be like to hang out with the violinist and his friends at his house, features guest stars like Sting, Josh Groban, Chris Botti and Kristin Chenoweth. As for the material, it has a little bit of everything—from "My Funny Valentine" to "Eleanor Rigby," but no holiday songs.

While the set's track list proves the release isn't a holiday album, who wouldn't want the sweet sounds of Bell and Sting drifting through their living room this holiday season?

The album's cover art even punches up the "at home" vibe. It sports a relaxed-looking Bell, dapper in a sport coat. Behind him are glowing candles in an appropriately blurry background along with a pair of women, one of whom is holding a beverage. Think wine bar chic.

Perhaps not so coincidentally, two retailer-exclusive versions of "At Home With Friends" exist, and each comes with a Christmas bonus track. Barnes & Noble's CD features "White Christmas" with Botti, while iTunes' version boasts "O Holy Night" with Chenoweth.

Unlike Sting's "Winter's Night"—which essentially is a holiday/Christmas album—Bell's set is ineligible for the Top Holiday Albums chart. ....

Starting with 37,000, it's the singer's second top 10 album. His first came with 2004's "Only You," which debuted and peaked at No. 5. Over on Top Jazz Albums, it's his 11th visit to the penthouse.

15

After Amazon's MP3 store pushed the title onto the chart a week early, the album now vaults up the list in its proper first week, selling 31,000 (up 901%).

31

The newest configuration of the "Now" series sports dance mixes of Hot 100 hits from the likes of the Killers (pictured), Black Eyed Peas, Katy Perry, Lady Gaga and Pitbull. It bows with 14,000.

43

After the film premiered in U.S. theaters Sept. 25, its companion album zipped up the list with a 196% increase. The film's Asher Book (of Y Factory, pictured) and Naturi Naughton are featured on the set.

59

The soundtrack to the animated Disney Channel series lands with 8,000 copies and starts at No. 1 on Top Kid Audio. The set includes the show's theme song, "Today Is Gonna Be a Great Day," by Bowling for Soup.

112

First iTunes got the album Sept. 1, then the CD was exclusively available through Amazon Sept. 8, and finally on Sept. 22 it went to all retailers. This week it returns to the chart with a 124% jump.

145

Like the act at No. 112, this new Disney group's album had a staggered release. After debuting last week on Top Heatseekers Albums based on digital-only sales, the CD release pushes it onto the big chart (up 235%).

170

The buzzworthy duo from the United Kingdom—Elly Jackson (pictured) and Ben Langmaid—already hit No. 2 on the Official U.K. Albums chart with this set. An early digital release prompts its start this week, one week before the CD hits stores.

179

This is the third soundtrack in the "Halo" videogame series to chart. It follows 2004's "Halo 2" (No. 162) and 2007's "Halo 3" (No. 200). This new set also enters the Top Soundtracks chart at No. 15.

192

A Sept. 22 reissue of the album with a DVD of a concert from Madrid boosts the set with a 36% increase.

Five Finger Death Punch's second album, "War Is the Answer," starts at No. 9 on Top Digital Albums and at No. 7 on the Billboard 200. On the latter tally, with 44,000 sold, the album gives the band its best week ever. The act's debut set, "The Way of the Fist," peaked at No. 107 on the Billboard 200 more than a year ago. However, on the Heatseekers chart—where new and developing artists rank—the album peaked at No. 1 and spent a whopping 82 weeks on the tally.

Robbie Furze and Milo Cordell make up this act, which bows with its debut album. The pair will open for Muse on the U.K. leg of its tour beginning Nov. 4.

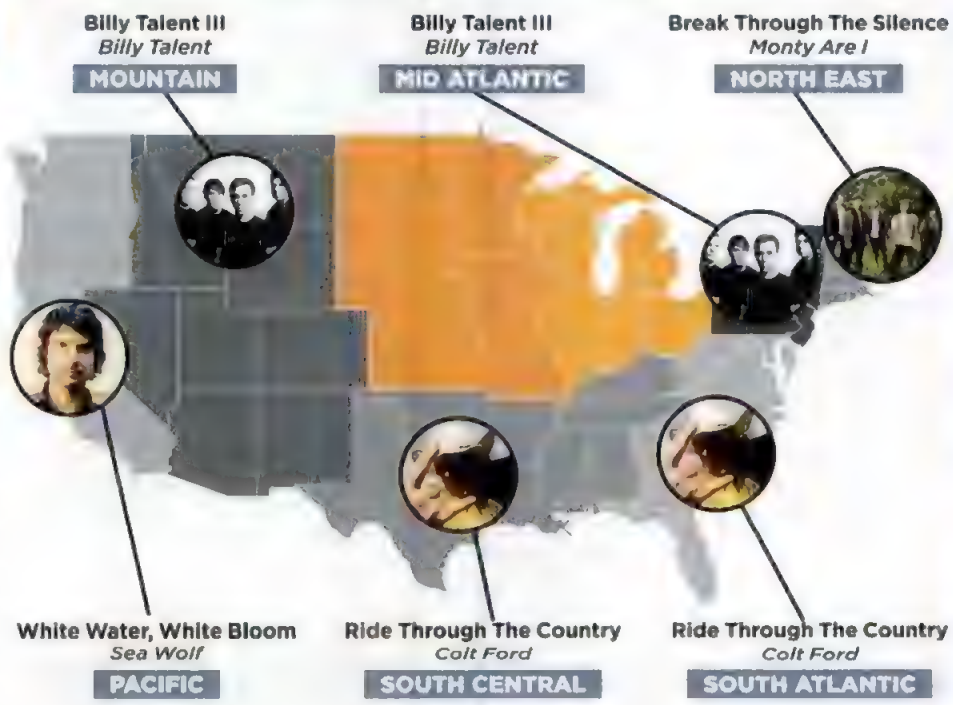
It's the fifth charting set on Heatseekers for the electronic/pop duo, which sees its latest enter with nearly 3,000 copies sold.



15

The set was the Amazon MP3 store's daily deal Sept. 26 and was sold for 99 cents. No surprise then that it jumps with a 143% increase.

11

The track's No. 8 entry on Hot Digital Songs (110,000 downloads) gives Underwood eight top 10s since the chart's launch in February 2005. That ties her with Beyoncé for second place among females, trailing only Rihanna (12).

61

The singer posts her first solo Hot 100 appearance since "Superwoman" peaked at No. 82 last October. In 2009, she shared vocal credits with both Jack White and Jay-Z. The latter collaboration slips 5-10 this issue.

71 & 85

The TV series' charting sum is now up to five with this week's covers of Celine Dion's No. 54-peaking song from 2007 and Queen's 1977 classic (No. 13 peak).

95

The singer makes his maiden Hot 100 voyage seven years after his first appearance on Hot Country Songs. The track is his first Hot Country Songs top 20 (No. 19).

97

The album's title track is the fourth single from that set to make the list; It's the second time she's had that many off one collection. Her second album, "Missundaztood" (2001), also had four Hot 100 hits.

BETWEEN THE BULLETS

PEAS' PERSEVERANCE PAYS OFF

The Black Eyed Peas extend their record No. 1 streak on the Billboard Hot 100 to 26 consecutive weeks as "I Gotta Feeling" holds at the summit for a 14th week. That song's run matches Mariah Carey's "We Belong Together" for most weeks at No. 1 this decade and ties it with "Belong" and four other songs for second-most No. 1 weeks in the chart's history. The Peas also become only the second act in the history of the chart to occupy the No. 1 slot for half a calendar year or more. Usher spent 28 nonconsecutive weeks at the top with four songs in 2004. —Silvio Pietroluongo

CHARTS LEGEND

ALBUM CHARTS

Sales data compiled from a comprehesive pool of U.S. music merchants by Nielsen SoundScan. Sales data for R&B/hip-hop retail charts is compiled by Nielsen SoundScan from a national subset of core stores that specialize in those genres.

● Albums with the greatest sales gains this week.

GREATEST GAINER — Where included, this award indicates the title with the chart's largest unit increase.

PACE SETTER — Where included, this award indicates the title with the chart's biggest percentage growth.

HEATSEEKER GRADUATE — Indicates album entered top 100 of The Billboard 200 and has been removed from Heatseekers chart.

PRICING/CONFIGURATION/AVAILABILITY

CD/Cassette prices are suggested list or equivalent prices, which are projected from wholesale prices. D after price indicates album only available on DualDisc. CD/DVD after price indicates CD/DVD combo only available. D DualDisc available. + CD/DVD combo available. * indicates vinyl LP is available. Pricing and vinyl LP availability are not included on all charts. EX after catalog number indicates title is exclusive to one account or has limited distribution.

SONG CHARTS

See legends on respective chart pages for the Billboard Hot 100 and Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs.

RADIO AIRPLAY CHARTS

Hot 100 Airplay, Rock Songs, Hot Country Songs, Hot Rap Songs, Christian Songs, Hot Latin Songs and Latin Airplay charts are compiled from a national sample of data supplied by Nielsen Broadcast Data Systems. Charts are ranked by number of gross impressions, computed by cross-referencing exact times of airplay with Arbitron listener data. Mainstream Top 40, Adult Contemporary, Adult Top 40, Alternative, Triple A, Active Rock, Heritage Rock, Mainstream R&B/Hip-Hop, Rhythmic, Adult R&B, Hot Christian AC Songs, Hot Gospel Songs, Hot Dance Airplay, and Smooth Jazz Songs are ranked by total detections.

● Songs showing an increase in audience (or detections) over the previous week, regardless of chart movement.

GREATEST GAINER — Where included, this award indicates the title with the chart's largest airplay increase.

RECURRENT RULES

Mariah Carey extends her record for most Mainstream Top 40 top 10s, as "Obsessed" advances 12-8. The song is her 17th top 10 dating to the chart's 1992 launch.

In second place is Madonna with 14 top 10 titles at the format. Nelly, Pink and Justin Timberlake follow with 12 top 10s each.

On Adult Contemporary, Michael Bublé registers the fastest climb to the top 10 for a non-holiday song this year, as "Haven't Met You Yet" flies 14-10 in its fourth chart week. Among non-seasonal titles, the song logs the quickest ascent to the top 10 since Michael McDonald's "(Your Love Keeps Lifting Me) Higher and Higher" also entered the top tier in four weeks in February 2008.

Bublé logs the swiftest top 10 ascent for an original, non-holiday song since his own "Everything" charged 12-10 in its fourth week in May 2007.

BETWEEN THE BULLETS

'RIDE' RUNS TO TOP

Toby Keith's "American Ride" gains 1.1 million impressions and steps 2-1 on Hot Country Songs, his 16th chart-topper this decade. Kenny Chesney remains in second place with 14 No. 1s since January 2000.

"Ride" is Keith's 19th trip to the summit during the Nielsen BDS era (since January 1990), which pushes him out of a tie for fifth place with Garth Brooks (18 No. 1s). During that period, George Strait leads with 26, followed by Alan Jackson (25), Tim McGraw (22) and Brooks & Dunn (20). Keith's new "American Ride" album is due Oct. 6. —Wade Jessen

MAXWELL'S DOUBLE DUTY

For the first time in the 16-year history of the Adult R&B airplay chart, one artist holds the top two slots. Maxwell not only takes the honor with "Bad Habits" moving 3-1 and "Pretty Wings" falling 1-2, he also becomes the second artist to replace himself at No. 1. Alicia Keys was the first to do so at the top when "No One" replaced "Like You'll Never See Me Again" on the Nov. 10, 2007, chart. On Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs, "Wings" remains perched at No. 1 for the ninth week, and "Habits" rises 16-9 for Maxwell's fifth top 10.

Elsewhere, Jason Derulo's "Whatcha Say" is the eighth debut track of 2009 to reach the Rhythmic Airplay top 10. This year has surpassed the total of 2008, when five such tracks hit the chart's upper region. —Raphael George

Up 5.5 million impressions, Trey Songz makes his fourth consecutive trip to the top 20. Two of his three previous tracks are at Nos. 5 and 12.

28

The song's boost of 1 million audience impressions gives the rapper-singer his first appearance in the top 50 since 2003.

31

The singer earns consecutive top 30s at Adult R&B for the first time as his single makes 11-10. Her debut hit "Epiphany (I'm Leaving)" peaked at No. 9 in May.

35

After peaking at No. 2 with "Knock That Thang," the first single from its current album, subsequent releases featuring Mariah Carey and Kanye West failed to rise higher than No. 34. It's now already surpassed by this track.

92

The official single from Brown's next album earns a modest debut, but it's based on only one day of airplay in the survey week. Anticipate a sizable chart move next week.

BETWEEN THE BULLETS

KELLY MOVES PAST A 'KING'

R. Kelly scores his 35th top 10 on Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs and passes Nat "King" Cole on the all-time list, as "Number One," featuring Keri Hilson, rises 14-10. Formerly tied with Cole, Kelly's climb places him sixth among male artists and ties him with Dinah Washington for eighth overall since the R&B chart was established in 1942. James Brown leads all acts with 58 top 10s.

On Mainstream R&B/Hip-Hop, which launched in 1993, "One" rockets 12-8 and becomes Kelly's record-extending 27th top 10. For Hilson, the track is her third top 10 on both charts.

After debuting a week early due to street-date violations, Kany Garcia's second album, "Boleto de Entrada," leaps 58-6 on Top Latin Albums (2,000 copies), her first top 10 on that list. Her debut album, "Cualquier Dia," peaked at No. 48 in 2007.

In its 11th week on Latin Rhythm Airplay, "Mi Cama Huele A Ti" by Tito "El Bambino" steps 2-1 (3.6 million audience impressions), only his second No. 1 on the chart. In terms of top 10s, however, he's tied with Don Omar for third most in the chart's history (nine) behind Wisin & Yandel (15) and Daddy Yankee (11).

LUIS MIGUEL TAKES TO THE NIGHT

Not only does Luis Miguel earn his 16th top 10 on Top Latin Albums with "No Culpes a La Noche" (No. 4, 3,000 copies), the dance remix album also bows at No. 11 on Top Electronic Albums. He's only the fourth artist to chart on both the Latin and the Electronic lists following Kinky, Kumbia Kings and Thalía. On Top Latin Pop Albums, where "La Noche" enters at No. 2, Miguel is now tied with Marco Antonio Solís for most top five debuts by a solo artist (11). —Rauly Ramirez

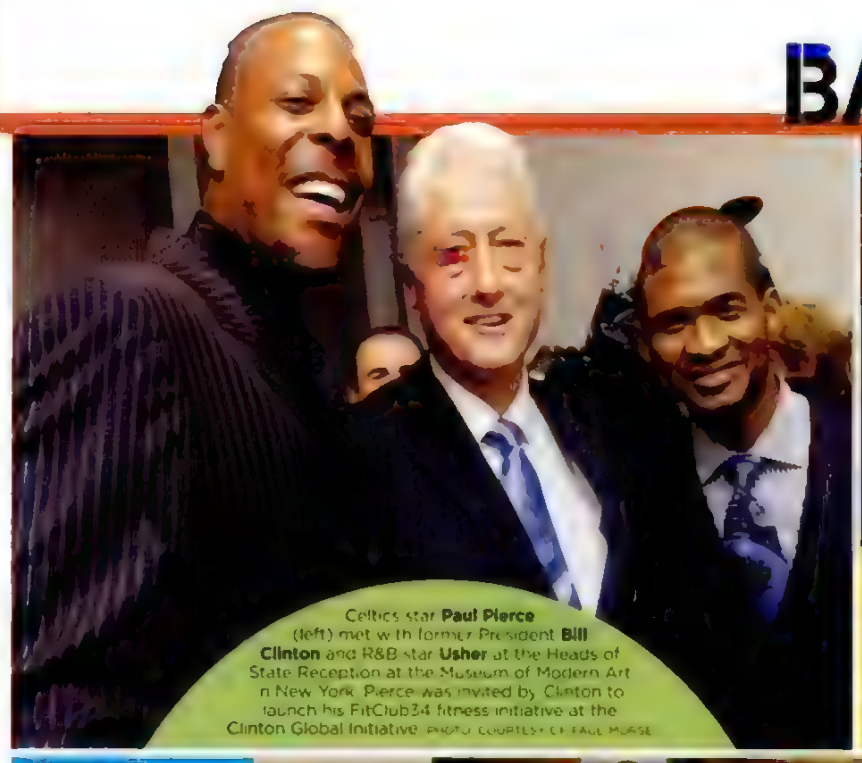
DELSOHN SOCIETY AIMS TO PRESERVE 'INTAGE JEWISH MUSIC

)ne evening in late August, MySpace Music president Court-ey Holt and his 5-year-old daughter watched Latin jazz band-eader Arturo O'Farrill and his Afro-Cuban band re-create the 961 album "Mazel Tov, Mis Amigos," a collection of tradi-onal Yiddish and Hebrew songs performed with a Latin twist, t New York's Lincoln Center. The concert was organized by ne Idelsohn Society, a volunteer-based nonprofit group whose oal is to "recover lost classics from the Jewish archive and eissue them," says Roger Bennett, who co-founded the group vith Holt, Birdman Records founder David Katznelson and Jniversity of Southern California professor Josh Kun. (Music iz veteran Seymour Stein is an adviser.)



During the Aug. 23 show—which aimed to promote the so-iety's Aug. 11 reissue of "Mazel Tov, Mis Amigos"—Holt re-alls thinking, "If we hadn't pulled this record out of the vaults, hen at some point it would've just turned to dust." In recent ears the society has also self-released reissues from Jewish rtists like Fred Katz, Irving Field and Gershon Kingsley.

The society's next musical project is a 30-track album of African-American artists singing Jewish music, slated for re-ease in March 2010. The as-yet-untitled double-disc set will eature performances by Eartha Kitt, Johnny Mathis, Lena Horne, Billie Holiday and others. The society's releases are vailable for purchase through its Web site, Idelsohn ociety.com, and other digital and physical retailers.

In addition to reissuing forgotten music, the society was ecently granted funding by Steven Spielberg's Righteous ersons Foundation to begin a film project that will docu-nent the stories of living Jewish musicians from as early as he '40s. "In 2010, we'll fan out all over America and record heir stories," Bennett says, noting that the footage will be rchived for preservation and research purposes.

INSIDE TRACK

IF THE SHOE FITS

Dizzee Rascal's latest album, "Tongue N' Cheek," may have already spawned two top 10 singles in the United Kingdom and debuted at No. 3 on the Official Charts Co. tally, but it's his new line of shoes that's making noise among sneaker pimps around the world.

Rascal teamed with Nike and his longtime collaborator, designer Ben Dury, to create a custom shoe that would match the aesthetic of his new release. The result is the Nike Air Max 90 Tongue N' Cheek, a tan shoe with a distinctive pink tongue and the album's logo stitched above the laces. Rascal's silhouette appears on the heel and the logo of his indie label, Dirty Stank Records, is embossed on the sole.

The shoe launched in London at the Nike 1984 store a few days before the album's release and quickly sold out. Rascal, not surprisingly, is a big fan of sneakers. "I've always loved these shoes, and I got maybe 65 pairs at home," he says. "When the call came up, I was all for it because it's a good shoe. The Air Max is the street shoe, so it just made sense."

A U.S. release date for Rascal's album hasn't yet been set.

Working Together To Save The Music

Internet Services Present A Challenge—And An Opportunity—For Radio

BY JASON TURNER

Record labels took another shot to the gut Aug. 21, this time from the Second Circuit Court's ruling in Arista Records, et al. v. Launch Media. The court held that Yahoo's Launchcast wasn't an interactive service as defined by the Copyright Act.

Unfortunately, for labels, this means that one more potentially significant source of revenue has been dashed. Launchcast, as well as other similar Internet radio services like Pandora and Last.fm, must only pay the minimal statutory licensing fees set by the Copyright Royalty Board through SoundExchange to the owners of the recordings.

This ruling is well-reasoned despite the labels' sensible displeasure with it. But when coupled with the continuing failure of Congress to pass a Performance Rights Act, it makes it more important than ever for everyone in the music industry to work together to keep this a viable, profitable business.

When Congress enacted the first U.S. copyright law with the Copyright Act of 1790, it intended to establish an incentive for authors to share their works with the public by protecting their creations. Recall that Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution gives Congress the power to establish laws to promote the progress of science and useful arts. (Granted, it wasn't until 41 years later through the Act of 1831 that music was first recognized as a "useful art.") As the Internet became popular in the '90s, the recording industry quickly began publicizing its concern that existing copyright laws couldn't protect it from piracy.

Partially due to these concerns, Congress enacted the Digital Performance Right in Sound Recordings Act of 1995, which was the first time that the owners of sound recordings were afforded the exclusive right to perform sound recordings (albeit an extremely narrow exclusive right pertaining only to paid subscription and interactive services) by way of a digital audio transmission. But the industry and Congress soon recognized that the swift evolution of the Internet and the advent of true "on-demand" services, which allow end users to decide exactly what songs they hear, called for a change to the definition of "interactive service" in 1998 to include services "that enable a member of the public to receive a transmission of a program specially created for the recipient, or on request, a transmission of a particular sound recording." Up until then, nearly all the services on the Internet were deemed noninteractive, since the content was chosen for the listener.

> None of us can afford to ignore the perceived problem. Especially because it may actually be an opportunity.

There's no doubt that college students and younger children these days are listening less to terrestrial radio. With the advent of social networking sites and noninteractive Internet radio sites like Pandora and iLike, the millennials are finding ways of exploring new music without the involvement of traditional radio. Does this mean that traditional radio will soon disappear? I doubt it—but only if traditional radio doesn't make the same mistake that labels did in the late '90s when they ignored the rise of the MP3 format. Radio programmers must tap into these social networking sites to connect with the next generation. Perhaps there are ways for terrestrial stations to implement Pandora-like programs on their station Web sites, which will generate revenue while helping introduce young listeners to the new music being marketed by labels.

The labels must also pitch in, however. It's reasonable to feel empathy for them, since record sales continue to plummet at staggering rates. It seems that full albums are disappearing into the sunset. The attention span of the millennials is but a few seconds, if you're lucky. Texting, tweeting, Facebooking and other such forms of communication are the waves of now, not the future. If we're going to sustain a record industry that can reward labels for investing in the "useful art" of music, everyone needs to recognize that we are all in the same boat and help find a solution. None of us can afford to ignore the perceived problem. Especially because it may actually be an opportunity.

Jason Turner is an attorney with Lassiter, Tidwell, Davis, Keller & Hogan in Nashville and an adjunct professor at Belmont University's Mike Curb College of Entertainment & Music Business.

FOR THE RECORD

The name of music engineer Marcella Araica's label was misstated in the 6 Questions Q&A in the Oct. 10 issue. It should have been listed as New Age Rock Stars.

FEEDBACK

SPEAK UP

Congratulations to Leila Cobo on her Latin Notas column titled "It Takes a Village" (Oct. 3). Almost everyone knows why radio stations aren't playing the music, but no one wants to talk about it.

If everyone starts speaking about this issue, radio stations will have to change their way of doing business and start playing good music. This is the way it was before.

Thanks for the well-written article.

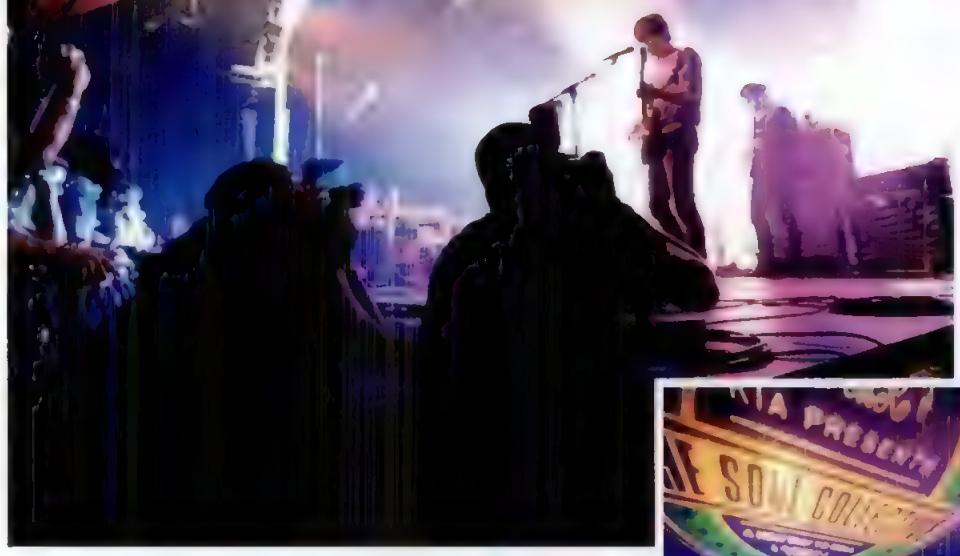
SOUL POWER

Kia Launches An Ambitious Music Initiative

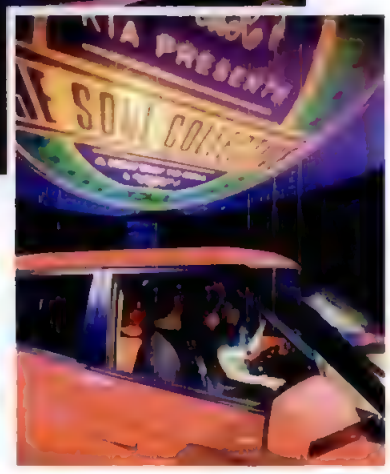
Most of the time, test-driving a car results in nothing more than a sales pitch, automobile envy and a brief sample of that new car smell. But for music fans in select markets, taking a Kia Soul out for a spin gets them something more: a free concert.

The shows are part of an ambitious marketing effort launched by Kia in hopes of attracting a younger audience to its Soul marque, which launched in March.

Dubbed the Kia Soul Collective, events are held on weekends in 10 different cities; so far, six have taken place, with four planned for Atlanta, Boston, New York and Los Angeles. Recent gigs have featured acts like N*E*R*D, MGMT and Against Me; future shows will include sets from Atlas Sound, the Pains of Being Pure at Heart and Silversun Pickups.



The campaign also includes a Web site that features a download of an original track by Janelle Monáe, branded cell phone and computer wallpaper designed by Jeff Staple and a short film by music video directors Jonas and Francois.



"This is the first time we've done something like this," says Kathryn Cima, manager of sponsorships and events at Kia Motors America, adding that the brand's only other musical venture has been a Vans Warped tour sponsorship. "We didn't start off thinking this would be a music initiative, but as we looked for ways to connect with the target audience, we found that music was a good way to reach them."

Cima says the Soul Collective events have resulted in more than 1,000 test drives. "We don't really have the data to do a one-to-one match in terms of test drives pegged to the events and sales," she says. "But we are seeing a great response, especially in the social media space. People are blogging and Twittering about Kia being cool and the Soul being a cool car."

Even though car sales waned in September, Jeff Tammes, senior VP of strategic marketing for Cornerstone, says now is the perfect time for Kia to start building relationships with younger consumers. "The purpose of these events is to introduce the Kia Soul to kids," he says. "Since it's a newer brand, many of them are finding out about it for the first time. While they might not be ready to buy a car right now, when they are, they'll think back to this event and remember the Soul."

Kia isn't the only car company using music to reach younger consumers. Scion and Yaris, both Toyota marques, have each ran music-based campaigns for the past few years, and both say they'll continue to use music to build their brands. But they add that they've had to cut back on some of their more ambitious initiatives recently.

Scion sales promotions manager Jeri Yoshizu says that the company continues to sponsor concerts in various markets. "We're doing a garage rock festival in Portland [Ore.] soon, and we'll be sponsoring a metal festival in Atlanta again," she says. "We also do monthly parties and we sponsor the tours of dubstep DJs in third-tier markets."

Yoshizu says that she's focused on keeping up the face of the brand while also keeping an eye on the bottom line. "We are doing cheaper events," she says. "Touring a group of dubstep DJs is a lot cheaper than getting a big-name rapper with a full band to play a show."

Chad Harp, a marketing communications strategist at Yaris, says the car brand's "Free Yr Radio" campaign also has evolved. "In the first year of the program, we were partnering with Urban Outfitters and local independent radio stations, putting on shows and giving away a free car to the stations," he says. "The second year we were bombarded with requests and had to scale back. Now, we're partnering with the local stations at music festivals and helping them broadcast the show. We're also running shuttles around the festival as a way to get people in the car."

Harp adds that, like Kia, his focus is on building a long-term relationship with the consumer. "We don't think people will run home from a festival and buy a car," he says. "What we are looking for with these initiatives is consideration in the future. I want people to see a Yaris and relate it to a positive experience." ••••

Fertile Ground?

Orchard Layoffs Call Into Question Future Of Indie Digital Distributors

In the wake of layoffs last month, Danny Stein, chairman of the executive committee at the Orchard, says the company will be OK. "We are doing well, and a number of the layoffs came as a result of our investment in new technologies and the resulting efficiencies," he says. "Most of the layoffs were highly predictable, and we will still be able to provide the same level of service to our clients with fewer people."

But the restructuring also raises larger questions about the strength of the indie digital distribution sector as a whole.

All told, the Orchard laid off 16 staffers, five consultants and an unspecified number of temps Sept. 29, according to a recent filing with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission. CEO Greg Scholl also handed in his resignation; so far, a replacement hasn't been announced.

While an examination of the Orchard's quarterly reports reveals the company has never posted dramatic losses, it has consistently lost money. While the Orchard is cash-flow positive from operations, the company had a net loss of $2.2 million in 2008 and is on track to surpass that loss in 2009. Additionally, layoffs so late in the year probably won't do much to improve net income until 2010.

Others in the sector are bolstering their financials by teaming with others. In July, the Independent Online Distribution Alliance announced a partnership—which included an investment—with Sony; it provides digital services for RED and is allowed to use Sony's physical distribution resources.

"The layoffs at the Orchard speak to the difficulty of operating in this segment," IODA CEO Kevin Arnold says. "For us, I definitely think partnering with Sony was the right move."

At present, all four major-owned indie distributors either require or "strongly prefer" that labels use them for physical and digital distribution. Digital distribution companies also face competition from services like Tunecore, which charges a flat fee rather than a percentage of money earned from sales.

The Orchard says part of its strategy has been to grow beyond being just a digital distributor. To that end, it acquired ownership of most of the assets of TVT Records in 2008. Even though Michael Bull, who headed TVT Distribution at the Orchard, was laid off, executive VP/GM Brad Navin says the physical distribution business is still important. So much so, in fact, that a recent press release about a deal with the German distributor Intergroove started off with the line, "Is there life after digital?"

"We never viewed it as a digital vs. physical divide," Navin says. "They are complementary retail channels, not competitors. We are finding that our clients want everything in-hous and we think there is a big differen between the ability of digital exper to add physical services."

In addition to building its physic distribution arm, the Orchard say it's concentrating on strengthenin its marketing platforms. In the case the recent release of Vice Recor act the Raveonettes, the Orcha handled not only the distribution the music, but arranged song pr mieres on music blogs and focuse on raising the band's profile on s cial networking sites.

"With something like Tunecor all they do is put a song up," say Richard Gottehrer, who co-founde the Orchard in 1997. "We have par nerships with labels and artists. W can do setup and promotion and g the most out of an audience."

Gottehrer adds that despite the r cent turmoil, he feels the Orchard still strong. "We're a publicly trade company, so I shouldn't really be ma ing forward-looking statements," h says jokingly. "But we are not on th way out. Greg [Scholl] did a fanta tic job, and this company has a gre soul. It has a soul that will live on b yond any of us."

After-Hours Airplay

SBS Offers Infomercial Time To Artists

The limited playlist slots available to Latin acts on the radio may soon expand thanks to a unique programming strategy launched by the radio network Spanish Broadcasting System.

Beginning as early as this month, artists who want to get airplay on SBS stations can circumvent the network's programming department by purchasing infomercials that feature one of their tracks played in full. The "Monthly Rotating Infomercials" will be sold in packages with costs varying based on the number of spins per month.

"The idea responds to a marketplace need," says SBS Entertainment senior VP Lucas Piña. "The company wanted to open a space for new artists."

The novel programming idea—which may be unique for radio overall—works like this: Developing and established artists alike can buy packages of infomercials that will air on SBS stations between 11 p.m. and 6 a.m. Monday through Friday and 11 p.m. and 10 a.m. Saturday and Sunday. The infomercials consist of an entire song preceded by an introduction that announces the artist, the title and the presenting sponsor.

That sponsor can be the artist himself, the label or a third party or brand; however, the sponsor must be named in order for the infomercial to run. Infomercials air at a network level by genre; a tropical track, for example, will run on all of SBS' tropical stations nationwide. There isn't any other programming—or ads—during the infomercial slots. "It will be like an iPod playing continuous music," Piña says.

While the idea of radio infomercials promoting singles or albums isn't new, the departure here is that unlike a 30-second commercial, the track plays in full. The drawback, of course, is that the infomercials' airtimes are those with the lowest audience—and it's not clear if these plays will count toward chart positions.

> 'It will be like an iPod playing continuous music.'
> —LUCAS PIÑA, SBS ENTERTAINMENT

Still, Piña says, because SBS has stations in major markets like New York, Los Angeles, Puerto Rico and Miami, the program provides a window of opportunity that might otherwise never open for new artists.

"SBS has stations in major markets where the population is active at night," he says, noting that many Latin listeners work at night. In these big markets, the night programming not only exposes the music to a new audience, it also functions almost as a real-time research system that allows programmers to evaluate if a track has traction before adding it to the regular rotation.

While labels and artists are taking a wait-and-see attitude on the infomercials' effect o exposure and sales, slots for N vember are nearly full, says SB director of new business deve opment Manny Mora, who wi run the program. Approx mately one-third of the slo have been purchased by indie and two-thirds by major label

"If we were in small market the reaction would be diffe ent," Mora says. "Here, ac who could never dream of pla ing in a major market have a opportunity for success."

Although the infomercia are for sale, SBS can declin tracks that don't fulfill produ tion quality or standards. "Th is uncharted territory for us Mora says. "We hope to crea a new business model that wi help new artists and reinforc established ones."

Phoning It In

Mobile Entertainment Live Attendees App It Up

Although the importance of mobile music is growing, it has a long way to go before it becomes a meaningful revenue driver for the overall music industry, according to speakers and attendees at Billboard's Mobile Entertainment Live conference.

Experts at the event, held Oct. 6 in conjunction with the CTIA Wireless I.T. & Entertainment Conference in San Diego, said that the industry needs to realize that over-the-air full-song downloads never took off the way ringtone sales did. Many added that labels now need to look to the new music-application market to reverse that trend.

"The explosion of apps is a real thing to focus on, and it's something we're optimistic about," said EMI senior VP of digital marketing Syd Schwartz during a keynote session.

Stores like the iPhone's App Store, BlackBerry App World, Android Marketplace and the new Windows Marketplace for Mobile have captured the interest and imagination of the music industry, but according to INgrooves CEO Robb McDaniels, it will take 12-18 months before buying music on mobile devices becomes noticeable.

Still, record labels attending the CTIA conference found themselves meeting more with app developers and other technology companies than with the mobile operators that would traditionally dominate their time at these kinds of events.

"If there are app developers in the room and have ideas, we would like to talk to you," Schwartz told the crowd.

Labels aren't the only entities with something to gain, either. Keynote speaker Alan Brenner, senior VP of BlackBerry platforms for Research In Motion, said a strong app environment is critical to help smart-phone manufacturers compete in today's post-iPhone world.

The key, he said, is to create a next generation of smart-phone apps that can be more than a fad. According to a recent report from the mobile analysis firm Flurry, only 26% of music apps are used more than 90 days after they're downloaded.

While the iPhone still receives the lion's share of attention, app stores from BlackBerry and Android devices are growing quickly. According to mobile music provider Thumbplay, the number of subscribers to its monthly ringtone and full-song download service who own smart phones grew from 5% 18 months ago to 50% of the total base, and the majority of that growth came from new BlackBerry and Android phone users.

But others warned labels not to view apps as a saving grace. "There's no silver bullet," said Interscope executive VP of digital Ted Mico. "Apps are one of many solutions. But they've already proved to be a viable force."

OTHER NEWS FROM THE EVENT

- Verizon and Google have teamed to co-develop a range of Android-based devices onto which developers can preload approved applications. The partnership also extends to mobile services and software, allowing developers access to Google's technology as well as Verizon's network data when creating new apps.
- Android devices are expected to explode this year, with 20 new models coming to market by the end of 2009. A Gartner Group forecast expects phones based on the Android operating system to capture 14% of the global smartphone market by 2012, beating the 13.7% share the iPhone is expected to have at that time.
- Tapulous released "Tap Tap Revenge 3," the next installment of its popular mobile music game "Tap Tap Revenge." Users can now purchase new music to add to the game, similar to the downloadable content available on console-based franchises like "Rock Band" or "Guitar Hero." More than 40 track bundles are available at launch from acts like Blink-182, Foo Fighters and the Killers. Bundles will consist of six tracks for $3 and two-track bundles for 99 cents. "Tap Tap Revenge 3" will now cost 99 cents instead of being available as a free download.
- After bringing a version of the "Rock Band" franchise to mobile phones through a partnership with Verizon Wireless Sept. 14, EA Mobile unveiled an iPhone version of the game that allows users to buy and download new content. It will ship with 20 songs, with five two-song bundles available as downloadable content. Details on pricing aren't yet available, pending Apple's approval of its addition to the App Store. EA licensed the "Rock Band" rights from MTV/Harmonix, but had to strike its own music licensing deals with labels and publishers. The game uses songs already available in the existing "Rock Band" franchise in order to use the same song stems as the building blocks for its game play, which has a similar look and feel.

MERCEDES SOSA

1935-2009

When Mercedes Sosa sang "They killed me so many times, I died so many deaths, and yet here I am, reborn"—the memorable lines from Maria Elena Walsh's song "Como la Cigarra" (Like the Ciccada)—she spoke to millions of Latin Americans who turned to her signature contralto voice and social messages during some of the continent's most turbulent years.

The Argentine singer, who died Oct. 4 of kidney failure in Buenos Aires at the age of 74, leaves an indelible mark on generations of musicians, songwriters and fans whose lives and art were influenced by Sosa's renditions of some of the most powerful songs in the Spanish language.

Sosa wasn't a songwriter. She referred to herself as a "cantora," someone who sang but also interpreted the music of prominent, issue-oriented singer/songwriters like Silvio Rodriguez, León Gieco and Violeta Parra. At the time of her death, Sosa had recorded two albums—"Cantora 1" (just nominated for a Latin Grammy Award in the album of the year category) and "Cantora 2"—for which she recorded many of her old hits as duets.

Born Haydée Mercedes Sosa on July 9, 1935, in San Miguel de Tucumán, a rural area in northwestern Argentina, Sosa was of mixed Indian and French ancestry and was affectionately nicknamed "La Negra" (the Dark One) for her dark countenance. Known for performing in traditional garb, she began singing folklore as a child and won her first festival at 15 years old.

Although Sosa spoke out against social injustice, she often said that musicians should play no role in politics. "Human beings have to resolve their own problems," she once said. "But music can console people who suffer from problems, and perhaps it can inspire people to try to solve their problems." But Sosa championed social causes, especially when Argentina was ruled by a military dictatorship that took power in a 1966 coup. In the late '70s she left for Europe, where she lived in exile for several years.

A favorite of artists as varied as Sting and Joan Baez (who once, enraptured, kissed Sosa's feet), Sosa performed around the world and recorded with a broad range of artists that included new pop stars like Shakira. And her stature beyond the world of music was evident in the wake of her death as leaders in Latin America and Europe paid her homage. Peruvian President Alan García, who flew his country's flag at half-staff, said, "We pay homage to the great singer of the people, because she could express pain but also hope and love for the poor." Chilean President Michelle Bachelet said Sosa's songs contributed to the battle against the dictatorship of Augusto Pinochet.

OBIT

Reinhard Mohn, the former chief executive of BMG parent company Bertelsmann, died Oct. 3 of undisclosed causes in Guetersloh, Germany, at the age of 88.

Mohn was the great-great-grandson of the German media group's founder, Carl Bertelsmann. Although he resigned as chief executive in 1981, Mohn remained chairman of Bertelsmann's board until 1991, and at the time of his death he was still honorary chairman of the company's supervisory board. His wife, Liz, and children Christoph and Brigitte remain on the supervisory board.

Mohn was born June 29, 1921, in Guetersloh and became head of Bertelsmann in 1947, after being repatriated from a U.S. prisoner-of-war camp.

During a career at Bertelsmann that lasted more than six decades, Mohn transformed the company from a German printer and book publisher into an international enterprise that today employs 100,000-plus people in more than 50 countries. Key to Bertelsmann's expansion under Mohn was its mail-order book club business, which boomed in the '50s.

Mohn also oversaw Bertelsmann's entry into the music business in the late '50s, when it launched Ariola Records. In the late '70s, Ariola acquired the Arista label from Columbia Pictures; in 1986 it bought RCA. In 1987, the three labels merged to create Bertelsmann Music Group, along with BMG Music Publishing. In 1998, BMG had a 10.5% global market share.

In 2004, BMG's recorded-music division became part of the Sony BMG joint venture and was eventually acquired outright by Sony Music in 2008; the music publishing business was sold to Universal in 2007. Bertelsmann re-entered the music market in October 2008 when it launched BMG Rights Management, in which the investment firm Kohlberg Kravis Roberts acquired a 51% stake in July for a reported €250 million ($348.2 million). —Wolfgang Spahr

Could U.K. Nix Merger For Tix?

Provisional Ruling May Not Matter Much In U.S.

On Oct. 8, the United Kingdom's Competition Commission issued a provisional ruling that the proposed Live Nation-Ticketmaster Entertainment merger would hinder competition in the U.K. ticketing market. But this isn't the death knell for the deal, and the commission's concern—which involves the German concert giant CTS Eventim—may not be a major factor when the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) weighs the deal.

"There are specific factors relating to the U.K.: the fact that Ticketmaster is so big—40%-50% of the market, according to the Competition Commission—and the fact that there is somebody [in CTS Eventim] that's set itself up to enter the market but who potentially is going to be scuppered from doing so because of this deal," says Simon Barnes, counsel for competition and European Union law at the London-based law firm Lovells.

Even CTS Eventim executives have previously expressed confidence that they wouldn't suffer as a result of a merger. Live Nation cut a deal with CTS as it positioned itself to launch its own ticketing company after splitting from Ticketmaster this year.

"CTS Eventim and Live Nation will fully honor their commitments under the 10-year agreement they concluded in December 2007," said CTS Eventim CEO Klaus-Peter Schulenberg in March after the Ticketmaster-Live Nation merger announcement. Schulenberg insisted that the merger would have "no detrimental impact" on the partnership.

"It is quite unusual in this sort of situation that [the Competition Commission is] trying to protect somebody who's not even on the market, but they must feel confident that CTS legitimately can be seen as a new entrant who will do well," Barnes says. "If Live Nation had not happened to have done a deal with CTS, I don't think this issue would have arisen."

CTS Eventim, based in Bremen, Germany, is moving into the U.K. market as part of its relationship with Live Nation. The European promoter/ticketing company runs ticketing for Live Nation in Sweden, Finland, Poland and the Netherlands, and the agreement was in the process of extending into the Czech Republic, Hungary, the United Kingdom and Norway. The deal also gave Live Nation a license to use CTS Eventim's ticketing software in North America, where CTS hadn't made inroads.

"As the second-largest ticket agent in the world after Ticketmaster, with considerable experience and expertise in other countries, CTS' [U.K.] entry would have increased competition in ticket retailing to the benefit of customers," said Christopher Clarke, Competition Commission deputy chairman and chairman of the inquiry group, in a statement.

Clarke added, "We believe that if the merger proceeds, Live Nation will seek to limit its relationship with CTS, with the effect of putting CTS' future prospects in the U.K. in considerable doubt."

The Competition Commission estimates Ticketmaster's 2008 U.K. market share at between 40% and 50%; it also operates in Ireland, Finland, Denmark, Sweden, the Netherlands, Germany and Spain and has affiliates in France, Hungary, Poland, Portugal and Slovakia.

Live Nation's business in Europe is broad and includes a string of independent European promotion and management companies acquired when Live Nation predecessors SFX and Clear Channel Entertainment rolled up the European promotion industry beginning a decade ago. Live Nation is the largest festival promoter in Europe and books and manages a wide range of venues.

The Competition Commission listed several possible remedies, including the divestment of the U.K. business of either Ticketmaster or Live Nation—probably a distasteful option for either company—or measures to ensure that CTS or another ticket agent can sell Live Nation's tickets.

"In this case the obvious behavioral remedy would be some sort of commitment from Live Nation that it will continue to supply tickets through people other than Ticketmaster," Barnes says. But competition authorities are "quite wary" of behavioral remedies.

Presumably Ticketmaster and Live Nation would prefer that the DOJ focuses on this part of the Competition Commission statement: "The commission has not found any adverse effects on competition affecting other ticketing agents, promoters and venue operators that arise from the merger."

The merger is also being investigated by the DOJ, which is consulting with the Competition Commission. The commission is an independent public group that investigates mergers, markets and regulated industries. The consultation on its findings will run until Oct. 29 and a final report is expected by Nov. 24, following an examination of ways to address the loss of competition Ticketmaster and Live Nation could appeal its decision.

In response to the provisional ruling, Live Nation and Ticketmaster issued a joint statement that said in part, "During the course of this merger process, Live Nation and Ticketmaster have listened to our fans, artists and other stakeholders. We've heard a range of views regarding the issues and challenges facing the live music industry. We firmly believe that our merger achieves an important and much needed public interest and remain optimistic that it will ultimately be approved."

LEGAL MATTERS

COURTING A PRECEDENT WITH THE CRB

by BEN SHEFFNER

If you think Simon, Randy, Kara and Ellen are the most important judges in the music business, try again. How about James, Stanley and William? That would be James S. Sledge, Stanley Wisniewski and William J. Roberts—the three judges of the Copyright Royalty Board, appointed by Librarian of Congress James Billington in 2006.

Unlike the judges on "American Idol," paparazzi won't recognize this trio when they slip out for lunch. But their work matters quite a bit to record labels and music publishers, which depend on the CRB to set the statutory royalty rates for mechanical and webcasting licenses. The decisions of this panel effectively determine who's entitled to billions of dollars in industry revenue from certain CD sales, Web radio broadcasts and other forms of distribution subject to statutory licenses.

Since its formation under the Copyright Royalty and Distribution Reform Act of 2004, the CRB has come under intense scrutiny from constitutional scholars, many of whom normally wouldn't care about how much labels must pay publishers to record a cover version of a song or how much Web radio stations owe in royalties. But they have raised serious questions about whether the CRB judges were appointed pursuant to a process that violates the Constitution.

Article II, Section 2, Clause 2 of the Constitution says that the president, the courts or heads of departments may appoint "inferior officers"—basically, midlevel federal bureaucrats. But only the president may appoint so-called "principal officers" like ambassadors, cabinet members and other high-ranking officials. The problem is that the CRB judges are appointed not by the president, but by the Librarian of Congress. And there's a strong argument to be made that, according to Supreme Court precedent, CRB judges are principal officers because they can't be fired at will and their decisions can't be reversed by the Librarian or other executive branch officials.

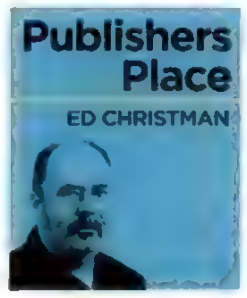
The constitutional argument has previously been raised in two cases; in both, the appellate courts held that the parties had raised the issue too late, thus forfeiting it. However, Judge Brett Kavanaugh of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit went out of his way in a concurrence to note that the CRB members' appointment by the Librarian of Congress "raises a serious constitutional issue" and opined that "[i]f the members of the board are in fact principal officers, then the present means of appointing board members is unconstitutional." Recognizing that this is no mere academic debate, Kavanaugh added: "[B]illions of dollars and the fates of entire industries can ride on the Copyright Royalty Board's decisions."

While technicalities have thus far prevented a ruling on the constitutional issue, a new case puts the issue squarely before the courts. On Aug. 31, the Web radio aggregator Live365.com filed suit in federal court in Washington, D.C., seeking a declaration that the appointment process for CRB judges is unconstitutional. The CRB won the first round Oct. 28, when Judge Reggie Walton ruled that Live365 "has failed to demonstrate its entitlement to the extraordinary relief of a preliminary injunction" that would have immediately halted all CRB proceedings. But the case isn't over. And on Dec. 7, the Supreme Court will hear a similar case, this one challenging the method of appointing members of an obscure panel called the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board. While the issues in the two cases aren't identical, the Supreme Court's decision in Free Enterprise Fund v. PCAOB will likely clarify who counts as a principal officer requiring presidential appointment.

So what happens if Live365 wins and the appointment process for CRB judges is declared unconstitutional? It's possible that all of the CRB's rulings under the current three judges would be rendered null and void, and proceedings would have to be restarted. A ruling for Live365 "would certainly throw into question the past rulings" of the CRB, says Ken Freundlich, one of its attorneys. That's a result that SoundExchange, which collects digital performance royalties for labels, wants to avoid; it has intervened in the Live365 suit in defense of the CRB.

> 'Somewhere on Capitol Hill, there has already been lobbying going on to fix the problem.'
> —KEN FREUNDLICH

Congress could step in and amend the law to require that the CRB judges be appointed by the president, thus resolving the constitutional issue. But "just popping in a simple fix isn't going to be easy," says Freundlich, predicting that members of Congress and industry lobbyists will be tempted to wrap the appointments issue in with substantive matters, including the fight over performance royalties for radio broadcasters and the appropriate rates for small webcasters. "I'm sure that somewhere on Capitol Hill, there has already been lobbying going on to fix the problem," he says.



In the meantime, Walton has said he will make clear his views on the issue by the end of October, when he issues a full written opinion. All whose livelihood depends on the rulings of the CRB will, or should, be watching. ••••

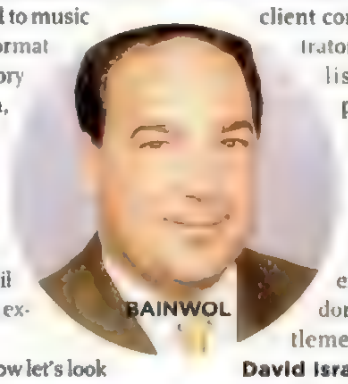
The Royal Split

RIAA, NMPA Reach A Settlement For Withheld Funds



The major labels have reached an agreement that will provide a windfall of more than $264 million in mechanical royalty payments to music publishers, but the details of how the funds will reach songwriters still need to be filled in.

The deal—negotiated by the RIAA, acting on behalf of the four majors, and the National Music Publishers' Assn.—will also set up a system to make sure labels will get proper mechanical licenses in a timely manner and eliminate the label practices of withholding all royalty payments for an album when the royalties for a single track are the subject of a dispute among songwriters.

The system should reduce the buildup of pending and unmatched funds. Until now, major labels have paid advances on mechanical copyrights to the Harry Fox Agency to compensate for their practice of issuing albums before songwriting share disputes are resolved.

From now on, disputes over the split on a song will no longer result in labels withholding royalty payouts on an entire album, and labels will not withhold royalties from digital sales on albums when the CD version is involved in songwriter share disputes. By law, controlled composition rates can't be applied to music sold digitally because that format must be paid at the full statutory rate for all songs on an album, thanks to the Digital Millennium Copyright Act.

Publishers that agree to the settlement will help resolve disputes among songwriters and waive late fees until the current mechanical rates expire at the end of 2012.

That's looking forward—now let's look at the settlement.

A special master—Kenneth R. Feinberg, who administered the September 11 Victim Compensation Fund and is currently administering TARP bailout funds for the U.S. Department of the Treasury (Billboard.biz, Sept. 16)—will take charge of disbursing the pending and unmatched funds.

In the first stage, about $164 million in royalties that accumulated before 2007 will be paid out to publishers, according to market share. It's up to publishers to decide if they want to take this settlement or pursue payment through other means.

Each major will supply Feinberg's team with information about publisher payouts from 2000 to 2006—even if some of the funds accumulated before that period—and Feinberg will audit the data. Using the data from each major, he'll determine what percentage of each major's mechanical royalty payment that each publisher received. While each publisher's royalty payment market share—and the corresponding dollar amount due—will be determined for each major, the publisher will only get to see the total market share and the corresponding amount of the $164 million it will get from all four major labels.

After seeing their amount, publishers can challenge Feinberg and his team on their overall market share; if they can prove their case, the payout would be adjusted accordingly.

"You don't know who ought to be paid by definition," RIAA chairman Mitch Bainwol says. "So you are trying to come up with an alternative method in an objective fashion and make payments that are fair, consistent and objective."

In phase two, the major labels will use the new system to pay out the $105 million in pending and unmatched funds for 2007-08. After a year, whatever funds are left will be distributed according to publisher market share for the 2007-08 period.

Whatever is left unclaimed from both phases will be returned to the majors so that they can pay royalties to publishers that didn't participate in the settlement.

The process doesn't govern how publishers or administrators will then disburse these funds to songwriters. Depending on their client contracts, publishing administrators may have to ask each publisher whether it wants to participate in the settlement. Once they receive the settlement funds, administrators and publishers have to figure out how to share the funds with publishers and songwriters, respectively. "All of that is done outside the scope of the settlement," NMPA president/CEO David Israelite says. "But administrators and publishers are bound by contract laws and have to fulfill fiduciary duties."

The Songwriters Guild of America, which has more than 3,500 members, will be "extremely vigilant" about whether the money passes through to the songwriters, SGA president Rick Carnes says. "It's a problem because it's a lump sum. But that puts the onus on the publisher, which has to look at that period of time and figure out who gets what from the settlement."

Overall, Carnes calls the settlement a "win-win," adding, "The fact that it's an opt-in settlement where you get to look at your options allows people to make a decision."

Feinberg won't resolve ownership disputes, Israelite says. So if one publisher bought a catalog during the period in question, the special master will pay whomever has the legal right to receive payment and let those parties resolve any disputes themselves. ••••

Another Chance For Ad-Supported Music

Imeem Is On Life Support From Labels—But Don't Count The Service Out Yet

Let's not engrave a tombstone for imeem just yet.

Conventional wisdom had the company going out of business before the end of the year. The deathwatch began this spring after it underwent a round of layoffs and struggled to pay its licensing obligations to record labels. Following the demise of other ad-based services like Spiralfrog and Ruckus, analysts began to question the viability of the company and the entire ad-supported music business model.

Yet both are still around, suggesting that the failure of previous ad-supported music services was caused not just by flaws in the nascent model, but by defects in its execution.

One of the biggest criticisms about using advertising to fund free music is that the cost of licensing the music is too high for the revenue that can be gained from advertising to support the model. Certainly a key element to imeem's continued survival is the fact that it won concessions from all major-label partners to reduce licensing costs. But the labels can't carry imeem and other ad-supported services forever: At some point, the services have to be accountable for their own strategies.

Most of the failed ad-supported services tried to offer a basic model where each song streamed or downloaded was attached in some fashion to a display or video ad that was solely responsible for paying for the licensing cost of that song and generating profits for the service. It was an easy model to explain to advertisers, but didn't create enough value to work.

From the beginning, imeem has focused on the harder-to-explain strategy of selling expensive, custom ad campaigns that paired brands with artists in unique ways. For example, it teamed Dr Pepper with Flo Rida for a campaign that let imeem users remix the track "Sugar" and share the resulting song with the imeem community. In another example, it matched the Truth anti-smoking campaign with Epitaph Records to provide a free concert to imeem members that signed the company's online petition.

Imeem also creates custom playlists for the likes of Fuse Energy Drink, breast cancer organization Susan B. Komen for the Cure and Kia. Rather than simply slapping a plain banner ad against songs an advertiser thinks its target audience is listening to, imeem lets the brand present those songs to users through playlists that appear in members' search results. So if a fan was looking for Sting, the search result would include the brand's playlist that includes songs from Sting as well as other music Sting fans may like.

The trick for imeem has been to stay afloat long enough for this model to take hold. According to the company's VP of national sales David Wade, it took a few years for advertisers to understand the more complicated model it was offering. In 2007, imeem executed only 30 such custom advertising campaigns. Last year, that figure grew to 130, and so far this year it has done more than 175 custom campaigns. It has several more lined up through year's end.

Go with the flow: FLO RIDA worked with imeem on a Dr Pepper campaign.

As a result, imeem's revenue for the first half of the year was 50% higher than for the same period last year, and it's up 30% year over year so far for the entire year. It recently scored a new $6 million round of funding and expects to reach profitability next year.

And imeem's not alone. MySpace Music has a similar model of brand engagement and artist interaction, and the Vevo music video joint venture among Universal Music Group, Sony Music and YouTube is expected to let advertisers sponsor big-name artist premieres. And many eyes are watching how the European streaming music sensation Spotify will bring its mix of ad-supported and premium music services to the United States.

Meanwhile, ad-supported music services are becoming more popular, which could help attract more advertisers as the model evolves further. Imeem claims 20 million unique visitors streaming "billions" of songs per month. MySpace Music's unique users have increased by 169% since it launched last September, and more than 90% of Spotify's 6 million users opt for the ad-supported free service over the premium tier.

Does any of this mean that the ad-supported music model has legs, or that imeem has a bright future ahead of it? Not just yet. The revenue that ad-supported music services bring to the music industry remains slim compared with paid downloads of full songs and ringtones. Arguments rage over whether the model does more to discourage sales or reduce piracy. And imeem is far from comfortable financially.

"I know ad-supported can work," imeem's Wade says. "It's just that you've got to execute correctly. And that's where it gets interesting. I'm not saying we have the right approach, but we're getting close to finding it."

READING MUSIC

It can't all be about smart phones. Verizon Wireless just introduced the new Razzle, which it hopes will add just that to its lineup of devices. Positioned as a text and music device, the Razzle has a full Qwerty keyboard and music controls on an adjustable bar that users can tilt and turn to their preferred position. The device comes with a 1 GB microSD memory card to store downloads from the VCast Music Store, which its Bluetooth capability can use to stream music to compatible headphones or speakers.

The Razzle is available now from Verizon Wireless locations for $70. —AB

BITS & BRIEFS

KIDZ BOP GETS COMPETITIVE

Kidz Bop is launching a new program where fans can create their own online video contests on the Web site KidzBop.com. The Super Contest Maker lets kids aged 5-12 design a contest where other users upload videos around a theme of their choice and provide the tools to set their own rules, monitor voting and entries, pick winners and award virtual prizes. The program will debut with a video dance contest created by Kidz Bop performer Dana. KidzBop.com is a social networking site geared toward young children. The company says users were already creating their own contests on the site, which led to the process being formalized.

PROMO MOTION

The mobile marketing firm Mozes introduced a free iPhone app that lets fans browse through the more than 150,000 promotions offered on its mobile texting service used by 5,000 plus artists, labels and others. Fans can search for the newest or most popular promotions, those offered by specific artists and types of promotion, such as sweepstakes. It also allows them to send text messages and pictures, participate in real-time votes and polls, and receive news, updates and content from participating bands.

SPOT STORAGE

The European streaming music service Spotify keeps adding new features—most recently, the ability for users to store a limited number of songs on their computer for listening even when not connected to the Internet. This offline mode is similar to the cached streaming feature of its mobile app for the iPhone and Android phones, but applied to a home computer instead. It's available only to those paying for the premium subscription service.

U.K. Labels Mine Early Catalog For Hit Compilations

Back in time: TOMMY STEELE; inset: the third volume of Universal's 'Dreamboats & Petticoats' compilation series

LONDON—Britain's pre-rock and early rock'n'roll recordings are enjoying a revival, thanks to clever marketing.

After the No. 1 success of wartime sweetheart Vera Lynn's Decca/Universal-released "We'll Meet Again" (Billboard, Sept. 26), Britain's first rock'n'roll star, Tommy Steele, 72, is back on the Official Charts Co. albums listing for the first time in 51 years with "The Very Best Of" (Spectrum/UMTV). Released Sept. 21, it debuted at No. 22 on sales of 8,500 copies, according to the OCC.

Brian Berg, managing director of Universal's UMTV, has been leading the monetization of pre-Beatles rock-'n'roll after internal research revealed an untapped 50-plus audience.

"We found that market certainly wanted to buy physical CDs. They like the music they grew up with [but] couldn't find it easily in the shops," Berg says.

A Marty Wilde compilation sold 80,000 copies in 2007, according to UMTV, followed by releases from Joe Brown (100,000-plus sales) and the late Billy Fury (150,000).

Brown, 68, is on an extensive tour this fall, as is 69-year-old Cliff Richard, marking his 50th anniversary with backing band the Shadows. Live Nation says 230,000 tickets have been sold for the latter tour, which wraps Oct. 23 at London's Wembley Arena.

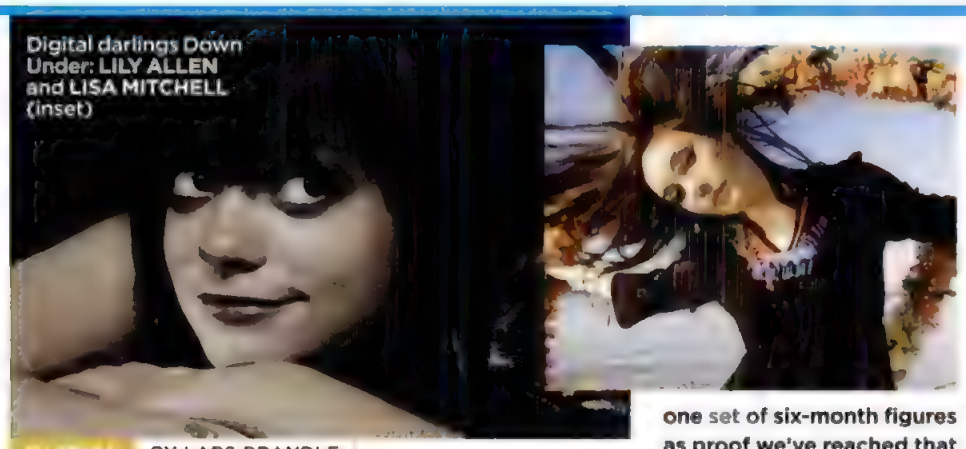
"Reunited" (EMI), Cliff Richard & the Shadows' Sept. 21-released album of rerecordings, sold 32,000 copies in its first week to debut at No. 6, according to the OCC.

The success of the Wilde release inspired the EMI TV/UMTV compilation series "Dreamboats & Petticoats." It was so successful that it spawned a stage musical, the first such Universal venture since ABBA's "Mamma Mia!" in 1999. The musical, in which Universal is a partner, is on a second national tour alongside a London run, with international shows planned.

The first "Dreamboats & Petticoats" album, released in November 2007 and featuring British artists alongside Buddy Holly and Chuck Berry, has sold 677,000 copies, according to the OCC. Volume two has sold 382,000; a third volume is due Nov. 2. Berg notes that downloads account for less than 2% of sales.

Berg says a TV campaign is crucial for reaching the older demographic, and UMTV will spend up to £500,000 ($792,000), mainly on prime-time ITV1 family/detective shows like "Poirot" and "Heartbeat," as well as breakfast show "GMTV."

"Regionally, we get an indication where it's selling in the first couple of weeks," Berg says. "So it's quite easy to target that audience."



With sales of compilations hit hard by the demise of mass merchant Woolworths, Berg says supermarkets are now crucial outlets, as well as Amazon and entertainment retailer HMV.

HMV head of music Rudy Osorio says such heritage releases "sell consistently well for us," particularly around gifting events like Christmas, Mother's Day and Father's Day. Artist anniversaries or TV documentaries "can also act as a powerful catalyst," he adds.

Although many rock'n'roll-era classics are out of copyright under the United Kingdom's current 50-year term for sound recordings, Berg says it's the major's "duty" to pay artist royalties, and he's confident Universal's marketing muscle can trump any rival, budget releases of copyright-free material. UMTV says its "The Very Best of Buddy Holly and the Crickets" compilation sold 100,000 copies around the 50th anniversary of his death in February, despite numerous other releases.

Meanwhile, Berg is planning further albums in 2010, including some slightly later recordings.

"The gray brigade are still buying physical CDs," Berg says. "We are looking to pick up catalogs and license recordings from that period." ••••

DIGITAL DIVIDEND

Australian Download Sales Surge

BRISBANE, Australia—Download sales are up Down Under, with digital growth more than compensating for declining physical sales for the first time during the first half of 2009.

While wholesale sales of physical formats slipped by $10.5 million Australian ($9.2 million) to $141.5 million Australian ($124.3 million), the digital market gained $11.2 million Australian ($9.8 million) in value to $37.1 million Australian ($32.6 million), according to the Australian Recording Industry Assn. Overall, the recorded-music business grew 0.4% to $178.6 million Australian ($156.9 million). Results for the whole of 2008 showed a 7.9% drop to $425.6 million Australian ($367 million).

"The results are exciting," says Ed St John, ARIA chairman and president/CEO of Warner Music Australia. "But we've been around long enough to not necessarily take one set of six-month figures as proof we've reached that turning point."

Executives attribute the success to factors including the rapid growth of the broadband network, the arrival of new platforms like Nokia's Comes With Music and Sony Music Australia's Bandit.fm, and the improved Australian economy.

The bulk of the growth came from online downloads, of both single tracks—up 36.5% in value to $18.1 million Australian ($15.9 million)—and digital albums, which rose 56.8% to $9.3 million Australian ($8.2 million). The format now represents 8% of overall album sales, up from 4.7% in the corresponding period of 2008.

"We're seeing the digital album taking off," says Nokia Australia music manager Karen Farrugia, who spearheaded the March 20 Comes With Music launch. Industry sources say Australian consumers have warmed to Comes With Music, contributing to a 135% gain in value to $6.3 million Australian ($5.5 million) for ARIA's "digital other" category, which includes subscriptions.

Farrugia says 25% of Australian Comes With Music customers are downloading full-length albums, compared with 4% at its a la carte download store.

The No. 1 digital album of 2009 is Lily Allen's ARIA-certified triple-platinum (210,000 copies) "It's Not Me, It's You" (EMI Music Australia), with digital accounting for 13% of sales.

EMI invested heavily in marketing the album online, driving footfall to download stores including its own Musichead MP3 site. In its first week, digital accounted for 60% of sales, according to EMI Australia director of consumer marketing Karen Tinman.

Australian singer Lisa Mitchell's label credits flexible pricing with boosting digital sales of her No. 6-charting debut, "Wonder" (July 31, Warner Music Australia). Digital accounted for 20% of first-month sales, according to Warner, although unit sales weren't revealed. It's available in two formats on iTunes: a 15-track $16.99 Australian ($14.92) version and a $20.99 Australian ($18.44) deluxe edition featuring a digital booklet and three extra tracks. New-release CDs typically retail between $20 and $30 Australian ($17.56-$26.35).

"Flexible pricing gives us the ability to meet demand and encourage people to sample," St John says.

Official digital-retailer market share figures aren't available, but a survey by the Sydney-based publisher/events organizer Immedia saw 69% of respondents name iTunes as their favorite download destination. Second was telco Telstra's BigPond Music with 8%, followed by Bandit.fm with 4%.

Bandit.fm is a label-agnostic store overseen by Sony Music Australia GM of digital and brand development Gavin Parry. He's confident the digital boom can be sustained, as long as labels don't rest on their laurels.

"If we continue to work with [Internet service providers] to reduce piracy and provide incentives to bundle digital music services with broadband accounts," he says, "the future is a bright one." ••••

The Digital Continent

Broadband Comes To Africa At Last

JOHANNESBURG—Africa's music business hopes a new online infrastructure and music services will finally ignite digital sales in South Africa and beyond.

While physical sales were still growing in South Africa as recently as 2007, the expansion has leveled off and started to drop recently. Recording Industry of South Africa data for the year to Aug. 31 shows a 7.2% year-on-year drop in value across all physical formats from 478.4 million rand ($63.9 million) to 444 million rand ($59.3 million).

RISA began monitoring digital sales Sept. 1, with labels confident that a number of new developments will boost online and mobile downloads.

The most significant is the July 23 arrival of Mauritius-based telco Seacom's undersea fiber optic cable, which delivers high-capacity bandwidth to Southern and Eastern Africa. This will bring high-speed Internet access to many Africans for the first time.

"Cheaper bandwidth means we can start maximizing our digital opportunities," says EMI South Africa CEO Irving Schlosberg, who's also chairman of RISA.

With three similar cables due to serve the region by 2012, labels—which have long stressed the need for credible music platforms to help consumers take advantage of improved broadband access—have also been buoyed by the arrival of Nokia's all-you-can-eat Comes With Music service in South Africa. The Sept. 21 launch followed the April 24 arrival of a local Nokia Music Store.

While Comes With Music has seen mixed results in other territories, Jake Larsen—Nokia head of music for the Middle East and Africa—is confident its extensive catalog, low entry price and "exceptionally compelling offering" will give it market penetration in South Africa.

All four majors and most local indies are onboard, with a high-profile marketing campaign due before Christmas. While sales figures aren't yet available, Larsen says the company is "happy with take-up [sales]" on the Music Store so far.

Executives expect mobile formats—which accounted for 83% of South Africa's digital sales in 2008, according to the IFPI—to dominate in the short term.

"Mobile is proving to be a growing income stream," says Adrian Skirrow, owner of Johannesburg-based indie ASP Records, local home of techno act the Prodigy. "It's good to see credible players like Nokia in the market. However, once broadband becomes quicker and cost-effective, we will see real returns on our digital strategies."

While sales of ringtones and ringback tones are falling in most major markets, the presence of so many entry-level phones in Africa means such formats remain strong sellers. Johannesburg-based independent digital music monitoring company Aquidneck estimates total monthly digital sales of 4 million across Southern Africa (South Africa, Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Malawi, Swaziland, Tanzania and Zambia), with ringback tones the most popular format.

Mobile music presents "a wonderful growth opportunity," Schlosberg says. "We are working with different partners to exploit our catalog and are starting to see income flowing."

While many labels are optimistic that new platforms will kick-start the business, others point to recent high-profile launches like online media store Prefueled and mobile entertainment platform Getmo, which have both struggled to make an impact.

"In Africa, if there are too many steps involved, music consumers just won't buy," says Arthur Goldstuck, founder of Johannesburg-based technology research company World Wide Worx. "Complexity of platform equals failure, which is why you've had several operators enter the market and achieve very little."

Meanwhile, others fear an explosion in broadband access could lead to a parallel increase in online piracy. RISA has moved to head off such concerns by arranging an October meeting with the Internet Service Providers' Assn. to broker an agreement on dealing with file sharing.

"It's a start to what we hope will be an amicable way forward on illegal downloads," Schlosberg says. ••••

True 'Fanatic'

Music Promo Company Partners With EMI/Caroline To Launch Label

Starting a new label in 2009 would appear to be a dicey enough proposition. But starting one with a full-time staff of three while tending to a thriving marketing business seems like an impossible task.

Josh Bloom is a true believer, though. He founded Fanatic Promotion in 1995 and has since worked with My Morning Jacket, the Decemberists, Sufjan Stevens, Girl Talk, Miranda July, Of Montreal, Daniel Johnston, Kings of Convenience, Dirty Projectors and VHS or Beta, among others. He dabbled in management and started a studio, Art Farm. But through it all, he had one bigger goal—a real record label.

Bloom and his partner, Sean Boyd, are betting that Fanatic's brand name will help them in the sales arena. Boyd adds that the crashing economy helped force their hand after years of talking about whether to start a label. "We were forced to downsize," Boyd says, "and we now have a smaller roster, which Josh is managing personally, and we are developing deeper relationships with our contacts and getting better results than ever because of it."

As for Bloom, the label represents a natural outgrowth of his core goals. "My biggest interest has always been artist development," he says. "I'm at a point where I can look at a picture of a band and immediately start thinking of ways it can be translated to an audience. I've always been frustrated by situations where great bands hit a wall and no one can figure out how to cross them over to the mainstream and build a bigger audience."

Bloom, who says that Fanatic Records has yet to sign any artists, has partnered with EMI Label Services and Caroline Distribution in order to bring his acts to a wider audience. "I'm old school," he says, explaining the decision to partner with EMI. "Part of my goal is to find bands that transcend the indie rock niche and to reach that wider audience of people who are still buying CDs and have more traditional listening habits. EMI is really proactive and they have a deep understanding of the music business."

Dominic Pandiscia, senior VP/GM of EMI Label Services, says that teaming with Fanatic was a no-brainer, despite its lack of a roster. "Fanatic has great platforms, and they know how to maximize revenue," he says. "When you couple that with everything that EMI Label Services has to offer, including our synch licensing and branding opportunities, it's a great all-around deal."

In terms of which bands might get to take advantage of the deal, Bloom says he's looking for acts from a wide range of genres, but has a few guidelines.

"I want to sign undiscovered artists," he says. "This could change, but right now, I'm looking for artists to sign with us before anything else has happened. Once an artist is part of the blog hype machine it seems like they've already happened."

To be able to focus on building careers and artist development, Bloom says he will sign bands to multi-album deals. "Artists will also have a provision in their contracts where if they use our studio and use Fanatic to do marketing and PR, the expenses associated with that will not be recoupable," he says. "If an artist does want to go outside of Fanatic and use someone else, they can, but those expenses will be recoupable."

Bloom says he'd like to start releasing albums at the top of 2010 and has ambitious plans for his schedule from there on out. "Ideally, we'd do one priority release a month," he says. "And then we'd supplement with some digital-only releases, or something by an artist we are already working on the promo side."

One of the artists hoping to be part of that schedule is Shunda K of the hip-hop act Yo Majesty. "Josh helped Yo Majesty and me for two years," she says. "I want to sign to Fanatic and put out a record in February or March. I trust Josh, and he has such a natural ability to find great artists." ••••

ISLAND DEF JAM MUSIC GROUP SENIOR VP OF A&R

Max Gousse

The recently appointed IDJ executive prepares to reignite West Coast hip-hop.

Max Gousse made the unlikely transition from sports law to A&R early in his career, and from all indications, he seems to have hit a home run.

The new senior VP of A&R for Island Def Jam Music Group attended St. John's University in New York and Florida International University in Miami in the early '90s, where he planned to parlay his love of sports—particularly baseball—and interest in law into a career as a sports attorney.

But he was drawn to music when he started working at the interactive music video channel Jukebox Network under Les Garland while still in school. The job led to meetings with key industry figures, including Sylvia Rhone and Irving Azoff, and Gousse was eventually offered a New York A&R post at the Azoff-helmed Giant Records.

He segued from Giant to his own label, Mecca Don Records, before moving to MCA Music Publishing as senior director in 1998. Joining Epic as senior director of A&R a year later, Gousse signed B2K before being recruited by Mathew Knowles at Sanctuary Management in 2002 and then moving to Music World Entertainment in 2004. During his four-year stint, Gousse served as senior VP of A&R before advancing to executive VP of A&R and new business development, where he supervised Beyoncé's multiplatinum "B'Day" and "I Am . . . Sasha Fierce" albums.

The Los Angeles-based Gousse now oversees the entire range of A&R activities for Island Def Jam on the West Coast, signing new talent—artists, producers, songwriters—as well as working with acts already onboard. One of the first projects completed under Gousse's watch: Amerie's new album, "In Love & War," due Nov. 3.

Why did the label decide to increase Island Def Jam's West Coast presence?

IDJ hasn't had an A&R presence here for a while; not since early 2008. We've beefed up the West Coast significantly, adding senior A&R directors Angelo Sanders, formerly with Aftermath, and David "Touch" Wright, who was with the production team the Underdogs.

My plan is to bring in four to six new acts from the Western region who are culturally relevant to Def Jam, who can help shape and make the label into more of a lifestyle entity on the West Coast. To do that, we have to sign younger acts and push some of the music trends that are developing up and down the coast.

What are some of those developing music trends?

There's a new energy here that's different from the rest of the country; a movement of young kids who don't necessarily buy into traditional hits. They're actually more in tune with what's going on in underground hip-hop to the point where they create their own style of dress and speaking. If we can tap into that youth culture, we can make significant gains.

Is an example of this the Jerkin' Movement, which is being popularized by acts like the New Boyz?

Yes, it's definitely a trend. Not just a music thing but a culture and lifestyle thing in terms of the jerk dance, the style of dress [multicolored skinny jeans and footwear] and the artists these kids are listening to.

The New Boyz kind of opened the gate and had a big single ["You're a Jerk"]. They were able to get on local radio, then the song blew up and spread nationally—that speaks volumes for this trend. I think we'll see other artists here continue to develop along those lines.

Have you signed any acts yet?

We just signed YG, a 19-year-old rapper from Compton, Calif. He's a very talented kid with a large following he's attracted through MySpace. He speaks to that audience. Although he has no radio play yet, they go to his club shows and know every lyric to every one of his songs. YG isn't a dancer per se, but he's kind of an OG who's been at the forefront of the jerk scene. They've danced to his music for the past three years.

Is Los Angeles becoming a creative hotbed again?

I definitely see that. The quality of the facilities here has a lot to do with it, and there seems to be more of a collaborative feeling between producers and songwriters here versus other cities, where there tends to be more camps and cliques.

There's a concentration of producers here that songwriters can work with without necessarily having had a No. 1 record. These producers include Wayne Wilkins, who co-produced Beyoncé's "Sweet Dreams"; there's also Soulshock & Karlin, Harvey Mason Jr., the Stereotypes, the Co-Stars, Dr. Luke and RedOne. You also have Tricky Stewart and the-Dream working here a lot along with Sean Garrett, Jim Jonsin and Rico Love.

What do you look for when considering an act?

I look for confidence, even some cockiness. If you're asking me to invest in you, you have to be able to carry the ball once we make that investment. And if you can write, that's all the better. But it's not necessarily required because A&R [reps] are supposed to bring songs. I also look for stage presence: Are you an artist who's out gigging and building a fan base? If this is going to be your craft, you have to be working in it every day.

The marketability of the artist is important too. My team and I have to quarterback the artist's project, so that artist must be able to convey what his vision is and then together we can convey that to the rest of the company so they can help execute it.

How much time do you devote to development?

It depends on the level of development the act has already reached. If it's someone with a great voice and confidence but who has never really recorded, it could be a six- to 12-month process as far as helping them perfect their sound. You want to be able to present the artist along with a vision and not just a bunch of random songs. You want to paint a picture for the label.

Is radio still relevant to breaking new acts?

I definitely see radio station playlists opening up; radio is experimenting with different sounds. The barriers that were once at pop have definitely fallen: A lot of urban records are turning into pop records, and pop stations are playing country songs. You have more consumers who are into different genres. And you'll find as that trend continues, radio stations will have to adjust their playlists.

What will be the final outcome of the singles vs. albums battle?

You have a segment of the audience who still loves to buy albums. But you also have a younger segment of the audience for whom it's all about the single. Basically, the industry will continue to adapt but cater to both types of consumers—and that won't change. The top 20 artists will sell a lot of albums and everyone else will sell a lot of singles. ••••

WORLD VISION

From Pop To Ranchera Alejandro Fernández's New Project Bridges Genres And Two Of Universal's Labels BY LEILA COBO

Two months ago, Mexican superstar Alejandro Fernández stood before a crowd of nearly 200,000 in his hometown of Guadalajara, performing one of two massive free concerts he organized to spur tourism to Mexico following the swine flu.

If there was ever any doubt about Fernández's status as one of Mexico's favored children, it was quelled here. A slew of stars, including Gloria Estefan, Enrique Iglesias and Luis Fonsi, took the stage with Fernández in an impressive show of support. As far as free shows go, it was unprecedented in the annals of Latin pop. ■ And then, the coup. Fernández took the stage dressed in charro garb, the traditional mariachi outfit of tight, adorned pants and jacket and wide sombrero and invited his father, icon Vicente Fernández, onstage for a mariachi set. ■ In an instant, Fernández went from pop star to ranchera symbol, a dual role that has been a constant in his nearly two-decade-old recording career.

PHOTOGRAPH BY DAVID FRANCO

Now, Fernández is preparing to simultaneously release a ranchero album and a pop album, each with different tracks, different producers and different marketing and sales teams. Titled "Dos Mundos Tradición" and "Dos Mundos Evolución," the project is set to hit stores Dec. 8, with the pop album out on Universal Music Latino and the ranchera album out on Fonovisa, both sister labels under Universal Music Latin Entertainment (UMLE)—although Fernández is signed to Universal Music Latino.

Being split between two genres "is what I've lived," he says. "I started in Mexican music and later went on to pop, and did very well. But I hadn't released a ranchero album in a long time. This has been a game, in a way: We've brought ranchera [music] closer to pop and pop a little closer to Mexican music."

Ranchera music, the dramatic, gut-wrenching Mexican songs that are usually performed with a mariachi band, is a subgenre of regional Mexican music that couldn't be more different from the more subtle, romantic leanings of pop. Although a handful of artists, most notably Marco Antonio Solís, Pepe Aguilar and Ana Gabriel, have tackled both genres (see story, below), having two completely different albums be released simultaneously has never been done in the Latin realm, in any genre. But it's a move Fernández thinks will benefit his career.

"Alejandro lives, sings, enjoys the two worlds—ranchero and pop," says Jesús López, chairman of Universal Music Latin America/Iberian Peninsula, who also heads UMLE, Universal's Latin music operation in the United States. "From the onset, Alejandro and I said that if the two worlds coexisted on a daily basis in his life and in his concerts, why not have them also coexist on his albums?"

The two albums are titled "Dos Mundos Tradición" (Two Worlds Tradition) and "Dos Mundos Evolución" (Two Worlds Evolution). Save for one track penned by Solís, the traditional album was written and produced by regional Mexican star Joan Sebastian, who also wrote an album for Vicente Fernández last year. The pop album brings together multiple producers and songwriters, including Kike Santander and Aureo Baqueiro, with whom Fernández had worked before on previous albums.

> 'We've brought ranchera closer to pop and pop a little closer to Mexican music.'
> —ALEJANDRO FERNÁNDEZ

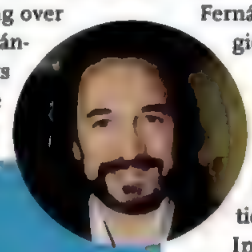
Both albums sound, of course, like Fernández, whose trademark voice—a potent tenor that's one of the most distinctive and downright beautiful in the genre—can go from pop crooning to bravado mariachi with equal conviction. But the arrangements run the gamut from the familiar to total departure, with the traditional album often veering into country and Tex-Mex territory while the pop album goes from the acoustic to what Fernández's manager Carlos de la Torre calls "Mexican soul," given its mix of contemporary and tradition.

This mix is at the heart of "Dos Mundos," de la Torre says. "Alejandro has that duality. He can put on an Armani suit and ranchera boots. And because he has those very Mexican roots, you believe it."

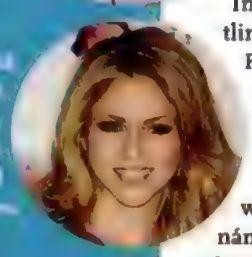
That paradox, de la Torre adds, will be present in every phase of the two albums' promotion. Different singles, for example, are being worked to each genre. The promise of dual support was important to Fernández, who signed to Universal late last year after a lifetime on Sony Latin, and who was anxious to release a ranchera album after years dedicated to expanding his career overseas.

To date, Fernández has sold more than 2.3 million albums in the United States, according to Nielsen SoundScan. And while most Latin acts talk about crossing over from Spanish to English, Fernández is one of a handful of artists who have managed to become superstars by crossing over from traditional ranchera music to pop. That duality began in 1997 with "Me Estoy Enamorando," a collaboration with producer Emilio Estefan Jr. that sold more than half a million copies in the United States, according to Nielsen SoundScan, and 3 million copies worldwide, according to the label, and established Fernández as an international star. And Fernández has been equally successful in regional Mexican music.

"He represents what is traditional and contemporary in Mexican music," López says. "That's what makes him unique. No one else can live in those two worlds so easily and with such artistic quality."



In this case, it may be Fernández battling with himself for a No. 1; on Oct. 5 Fernández's two singles were sent simultaneously to radio. The pop track "Se Me Va La Voz," was written by Tabaré and produced by Baqueiro while the ranchero song, "Estuve," was written and produced by Sebastian. Fernández previewed both tracks for fans on his Twitter account. Both albums will be promoted digitally on iTunes' Countdown feature. "The marketing will be done jointly between Fonovisa and Latino," says Universal Music Latino president Walter Kolm. "The entire marketing strategy goes hand in hand. Even when he performs on television, he will sing both singles."



The albums will be sold separately and as a set. In a second marketing phase Kolm says, both albums will probably be launched together with exclusive bonus content.

"We have a unique situation here,"

Latin Artists Who Cross Over To Pop Can Get A Sales Boost

VICENTE FERNÁNDEZ (left) and ALEJANDRO FERNÁNDEZ perform in Guadalajara to encourage tourism to Mexico.

Kolm says. "An artist with this duality with a company like Universal that has two separate labels."

On the Mexican end, says Disa/Fonovisa president Gustavo López, "the regional production is the most anticipated album this fall in the Mexican music arena. The combination of Alejandro Fernández and Joan Sebastian producing is a dream come true."

The fact that Fernández has been recording more in pop than ranchera in the past few years has no bearing on the album's possibilities, Gustavo López says. "He was a huge regional star before breaking in pop."

Fernández is the youngest son of Vicente Fernández, widely considered the most prominent living ranchera singer and one of Latin music's biggest icons. As Vicente's son, Alejandro was pushed into the limelight early; when he was barely 3 years old, he took the stage with his father for the first time, panicked and began to cry. The younger Fernández went on to study architecture but eventually found his way back to music, releasing his self-titled debut album in 1992 and launching one of the most prolific, successful and memorable careers in the Latin realm.

Fernández traverses pop and ranchera with ease beyond his recordings as well. In his shows, he performs pop and ranchera sets, first dressed in jeans or a suit and accompanied by a pop band, then clad in a full charro outfit and accompanied by a mariachi. While he can easily play theaters in Spain and arenas in the United States and Latin America, in Mexico, Fernández performs during traditional celebrations across the country and in palenques, the circular theaters found in many Mexican cities that can seat up to 15,000. In these settings, he always performs dressed in Mexican garb.

Capturing the duality of both worlds in all marketing material was important, de la Torre says, and although each album has its own identity, both the videos and the albums' art and concept will come together at some point.

The albums' art, for example, which is still in the planning stages, may depict Fernández divided between his two worlds, dressed as an international artist in a traditional Mexican hacienda or as a Mexican charro in front of a modern building. But while in the past Fernández had pictures taken in different cities and countries, this time everything will center in Mexico, specifically in his home state of Jalisco. It is, de la Torre says, the contrast of something very modern with something very Mexican.

Universal is still in the process of aligning sponsors and media partners for the album releases, including partnerships with mobile carriers in different Latin American countries. Fernández, however, has never been big on sponsorship deals, and those he strikes hit close to home, as is the case with Grupo Modelo, the maker of Corona Beer, which sponsored his last tour and with whom conversations are beginning for his next tour.

Although sales are down and the economy is ailing, de la Torre says that securing a sponsor still isn't essential to Fernández's project. "I think we have to show fans that we stand by who we are and we will continue to record good songs," he says. "Our commitment to the fans has to continue, and times like this are when you most have to concentrate in releasing great songs. We have to continue to think positive. They say winners aren't those who do things differently. Winners are those who do different things. That's what we're doing." ••••

THE BILLBOARD Q&A: ALEJANDRO FERNÁNDEZ

As Alejandro Fernández prepares to release "Dos Mundos Tradición" and "Dos Mundos Evolución," he's doing double duty as a singer of ranchera music and one of Latin music's leading pop stars.

Why release two albums simultaneously?
We planned it to attack the two markets and the two targets. Normally, when you release an album in one genre, it takes at least three years to return to it, and you could lose your other audience. What we wanted to do was reach both markets at the same time. I hadn't recorded a Mexican album in almost six years and I had that need to do it—and I think the fans were anxious for it as well. Although I've done very well with pop, and in a way, the pop that we do sounds very Mexican.

Doing such a release has never been done. Are you nervous?
No. On the contrary, I think it will be excellent for my career. Universal is in love with the project, the album, the songs. Jesús [López, chairman of Universal Music Latin America/Iberian Peninsula and head of Universal Music Latin Entertainment] has made me feel at home.

You're working on the album imaging now. What's the idea?
We're playing a little with the album concept. It will bring you close in a way to the two worlds that I've lived: the countryside, the farm, the animals, but I've also lived an urban life in the city. It's the first time we're working with the photographer and the art designer at the same time.

Your Mexican concerts in your home state of Jalisco to promote tourism were a huge success. Did their planning have anything to do with your albums?
No. That was about supporting the secretary of tourism, particularly because Guadalajara was going through a very rough time. And then, with the swine flu, no one really knew what could happen. What we wanted to do was tell the world that everything was OK.

You play almost every weekend, and you play many shows during Mexican festivities around the country and in palenques, but you also perform in arenas and theaters. Are the shows completely different?
The theatrical presentations have far more production value, but the vibe that you have live in a palenque is incomparable. It becomes addictive. Those concerts are more relaxed, more bohemian. You can tell that people are really there to enjoy themselves. We also play pop in the palenque shows, but we don't have any changes. I perform dressed in charro garb the entire time. But we do have great lighting production, screens, that kind of thing.

Initially you were thinking of releasing only a pop album, and then you had an encounter with producer/songwriter Joan Sebastian. What can you say about that?
We knew we wanted to record a ranchero album. In fact, we'd thought about Joan Sebastian [to produce it], but then he did the album for my father and we shelved that option. As we were looking for a ranchero producer, Joan came up to me during a show in a palenque and said, "Alex, I've come to say hello and to tell you I want to do an album with you. It's something I've been planning for a long time." And I said, "Oh, come on!" Because we didn't want to repeat [what my father had done]. And he said, "No, no, no, Alex. I have 11 songs. Let me play them for you and you tell me if they sound like your Dad's." And he'd brought a CD player and he played the songs, and my jaw dropped. They were totally different from what he'd done with my dad. So I had to do it. And on the other end, the pop album was already well on its way.

Some of the songs aren't traditional mariachi. Some tracks sound almost country.
It's a universal mix. That's why I say that what we did was bring pop closer to Mexican music and Mexican music closer to pop. But there are songs that are totally mariachi. And you do hear the mariachi in full, but performed in a different way and with different instruments.

When you record pop and ranchero, do you have to be in a different mindset to do each?
You sing them in a completely different way. They are two completely different genres. Ranchero is stronger, more passionate, it has more energy. If you sing a pop song in that manner, it doesn't sound well. You really have to change your mental channel when you go from ranchero to pop. But with this album, doing two sets of material, truth is, I'm exhausted.

Could you live, say, in Miami?
For a bit. Maybe on vacation for four, five months. But leave behind Mexico, my home, my roots and all my culture? That would be hard. —LC

TOKIO HOTEL HAS ALREADY CONQUERED EUROPE. CAN THE ELABORATELY COIFFED GERMAN BOY BAND GET BIG IN THE U.K. AND AMERICA?

BY MARK SUTHERLAND
PHOTOGRAPH BY OLIVER GAST

Sometimes, much weirder things happen at the MTV Video Music Awards than Kanye West interrupting an acceptance speech. ¶ Take the 2008 VMAs ceremony, for example, when the A-list glamour of Hollywood's Paramount Studios red carpet was upset by the entrance of four teenage cyborgs with preposterous hair that stood atop an enormous monster truck. Emblazoned with their band name in foot-high letters, the truck was the cyborgs' not-particularly-subtle way of telling America what the rest of the planet already knew: Tokio Hotel had arrived. ¶ So far, so Eurotrash gatecrasher. Tokio Hotel—a curious electro-Goth-glam-emo boy band that had climbed no higher than No. 39 on the Billboard 200—had what seemed a token nomination in the fan-voted best new artist category. It was up against the crème de la crème of U.S. female pop: Miley Cyrus, Katy Perry, Jordin Sparks and—oh, the irony—Taylor Swift. The likelihood of Tokio Hotel winning seemed about equal to that of Satan ice skating to work the next day. ¶ "We were at the awards watching it outside on a massive screen," recalls Martin Kierszenbaum, chairman of Tokio Hotel's U.S. label, Cherrytree Records, as well as president of A&R for pop/rock at Interscope and head of international operations for Interscope Geffen A&M. "I was half-distracted because I didn't really expect them to win—it just seemed a little . . . hopeful. But they announced it and suddenly [Interscope marketing executive] Bob Johnsen just punched me as hard as he could on the arm. Boom!" ¶ The band and most of the audience were similarly dumbstruck. Yet no one saw the need to interrupt singer Bill Kaulitz—the one who looks like a cross between a Bratz doll and a cockatoo—during his incredulous acceptance speech. ¶ "To be honest, it would have been a good moment if someone had come onstage," Kaulitz reminisces a year later. "I was onstage at the VMAs and I was speechless." ¶ "We got very drunk," says his guitarist twin brother Tom with a laugh—he's the one who looks like a cross between Predator and a Jonas Brother. "Even though we can't drink in the U.S. until we're 21." ¶ The next day, they weren't the only ones suffering. ¶ "Man, I had a charley horse from that night," Kierszenbaum says with a laugh. "But I'll take a charley horse any day if it means winning an award."

[illegible] THEIR MOTHER TONGUE

One suspects many in the Tokio Hotel camp have been sporting similar injuries in the last four years. The band acknowledges the VMA win as "the biggest thing in our entire career," but in truth it was just another moment in a career trajectory that has defied conventional wisdom, international boundaries and, at times, logic.

Formed in the East German town of Magdeburg, the band—which also features bassist Georg Listing and drummer Gustav Schäfer, the two who look like they've come to fix the Kaulitz brothers' car and computer, respectively—began playing under the name Devilish in 2001.

A deal with Sony BMG followed. But Tokio Hotel was dropped in 2005 when the members were just 15—a decision that, in pure commercial terms, is starting to compare to Decca's rejection of the Beatles. Undeterred, the twins signed with Universal Music Germany and quickly became a hot property with their 2005 German-language debut, "Schrei."

And there, frankly, the story should stop. German-language pop music is right up there with English cuisine and American diplomacy as concepts that shouldn't travel and usually don't. At all. Not since Nena's 1983-84 hit "99 Luftballons"—cited by Bill as a formative influence—had songs with umlauts made it beyond the Maginot Line.

Yet "Schrei" didn't just reach No. 1 in Germany and Austria and top three in Switzerland. It hit the top 10 in Greece, Hungary, the Czech Republic and Poland and, almost unprecedentedly, No. 12 in France—a country that traditionally regards German pop music in much the same way it looked at George Bush—while peaking on Billboard's European Top 100 Albums chart at No. 5.

The follow-up, 2007's "Zimmer 483," did even better, peaking on European Top 100 Albums at No. 4. It hit No. 1 in Germany and No. 2 in France; went top 10 in Austria, Switzerland, Greece, Hungary, the Czech Republic and Poland; and charted everywhere from Finland to Italy. The band even performed in Tel Aviv—a rarity for German-speaking artists—after Israeli fans launched a petition demanding a concert.

"It was strange," Tom says with a shrug of such cross-border success, "but cool. Our fans started to learn German so they could sing along."

At the same time, however, executives and band members alike were at something of a loss to explain the group's appeal. Bill cites the band's formidable online presence as a factor, while executives cite Bill's exotic look as crucial in attracting media attention and a vocal female fan base.

Any time that might have been used to contemplate this puzzle the twins spent learning English in a bid to conquer the countries that hadn't yet embraced the group's cyber-Goth persona.

In 2007, Tokio Hotel released its first English-language album, "Scream," featuring songs from the first two German albums sung in English. It has sold 175,000 U.S. copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan, spending 21 weeks on the Billboard 200. It was also a hit across Europe, bringing the band's first top 10 success in Italy, the Netherlands, Portugal, Sweden and Flanders. The French sent it to No. 6. They'll be eating English cheese next.

Tokio Hotel's new album, "Humanoid," came out almost simultaneously around the world—Oct. 2 in Germany and continental Europe, Oct. 6 in the United States—in both German and English versions.

"It's necessary we stick to the German-language origins in some markets," says Cornelius Ballin, the Berlin-based director of international exploitation at Universal Music Germany. "But English is the international language of music and the band wants to be heard in that language as well. Each territory will focus on one version but as they have fans who want to get their hands on everything, [most countries] will put both out."

In the United States, a Best Buy-exclusive version of the album will feature the German album alongside the English one in a two-CD package. This time the band recorded two versions of every song at once.

"It's not a one-to-one translation this time," Tom says. "The songs are around the same topic but we had to view them as different things really.

"We're working twice as hard as any other band," Bill says with a laugh. "I feel comfortable with the English versions this time. I'm a perfectionist, so the first English record was very hard for me. I don't want to sound like a German guy trying to sing in English."

"Humanoid," which is more electronic than previous albums, is heavy on the science fiction (think "Terminator" or "District 9"). The first single is "Automatic" (or, if you prefer, "Automatisch"), a brilliantly ludicrous techno-rock anthem with a video featuring fast cars, robot sex and Bill looking like Björk if she had played the Tina Turner role in "Mad Max Beyond Thunderdome." The rest of the album is almost equally over the top, and the fist-punching rock of "Noise" and the Depeche Mode-style electronica of "Human Connect to Human" are catchy enough to appeal to teens from Berlin to Boise, Idaho.

For the album release, Universal has partnered with Media Markt, a Pan-European consumer electronics and entertainment retailer. The chain will give an item of band merchandise to consumers who preorder the album at stores in Germany, France, Spain, the Netherlands, Austria, Switzerland and Belgium. It will also set up displays dedicated to the act, and 13 outlets across the seven territories will present 3-D broadcasts of the band performing tracks from the new album. The band will play a live showcase at the opening of Media Markt's new flagship store in the Paris suburbs at the end of October.

"We need [entertainment] specialists in the market in Europe because that's the way we break acts," says Romain Delnaud, the London-based director of operations for commercial affairs at Universal Music Group International. "Media Markt have an international presence that allows us to coordinate the campaign across the markets."

The deal could help Media Markt as well. "Tokio Hotel is a good fit for us," says Wolfgang Kirsch, chief procurement officer of Media-Saturn Group. "Both of us started our career in Germany and expanded into other countries very successfully. The combination of music, innovative technique and a live experience is a perfect fusion."

The band members might also want to look at alternative uses for the 3-D technology if it can help them be in more than one place at the same time. Such is the devotion of the group's rabid fan base—either hyperventilating teenage girls or more intense emo types, depending on the territory—that the Kaulitz brothers can no longer have a quiet drink anywhere in Europe.

"It's not a job for me," Bill says with a shrug. "It's my life. Tokio Hotel is [an extension of] my personality and the whole look comes from that."

"It's totally cool that he gets all the attention," jokes Tom, who bickers—good-naturedly rather than violently—with his brother. "As long as I get more girls than him."

WORLDWIDE SUCCESS COULD BE 'AUTOMATIC'

Tokio Hotel's global sales are now at 3.5 million copies, plus 1 million DVDs, according to Universal. The international scope of the band's marketing campaign is obvious, and the act's official Web site is available in 11 languages. "Automatic" is a worldwide MTV video priority. The band will appear at the network's European Music Awards Nov. 5 in Berlin and headline MTV Day 09—broadcast worldwide as an MTV World Stage presentation—Oct. 9 in Athens. Regular European tour dates will follow early next year.

The band will be in the United States Oct. 10-19, and Kierszenbaum expects to confirm appearances on major TV shows. (One already confirmed is MTV's "It's On With Alexa Chung.") With early media support from Rolling Stone, Seventeen and the New York Times, he intends to delay a major radio push to top 40 formats until "we've got real traction in the marketplace."

"The sky's the limit," Kierszenbaum says. "The band has turned in a great record, we did a lot of groundwork last time, and people are opening up to new kinds of music. Bill's an absolute worldwide superstar—it's just a matter of time and we're going to make sure it happens."

Universal Music Germany's Ballin says South American markets are also a priority this time around, and an initial push in Asia is planned for next year. Even the United Kingdom, which now stands alone in declining to embrace the band, will receive the full Tokio Hotel treatment in 2010.

"Success is like a drug," Bill says. "We want to be successful everywhere. But if not, at least we can go on vacation to London."

Best not to book that holiday just yet, though. If anyone can make the Brits love German pop music, it's Tokio Hotel. Nothing—not even Kanye West—can stop them now. ••••

See Spotify Run

The Swedish Streaming Service Has Taken Europe By Storm. Can It Translate That Buzz Into Popularity—And Profit—In The U.S.?

BY ANTONY BRUNO | ILLUSTRATION BY PETER HOEY

MTV Urge . . . Yahoo Music Unlimited . . . Virgin Digital . . . Since 2003—when iTunes launched in the United States—all of these digital music services have come and gone, without challenging Apple's market dominance, despite the backing of resource-rich parent companies. ¶ Add in all the startups that have crashed and burned in the same time period and it starts to look like no service could ever rival iTunes' traction with customers and critics. ¶ Until now.

The Sweden-based startup Spotify, launched for public access in October 2008, has momentum like no other digital music service of the last six years. It offers on-demand music streaming, in both free and premium services, and now claims to have more than 6 million users in Sweden, Norway, Finland, the United Kingdom, France and Spain. At one point it reported signing up new members at a rate of 50,000 per day, although that figure has fallen since September, when the service restricted its free version to invited guests in the United Kingdom.

Spotify has won high marks from reviewers for the ease with which it provides access to a catalog of more than 6 million tracks from majors and indies alike and the unobtrusive way it delivers advertising.

Spotify's recently launched mobile version—available for the iPhone and Android-powered devices in Europe to premium subscribers who pay the equivalent of around $15 per month—has won similar praise. Although Spotify doesn't comment on its fund-raising activity, it has reportedly won $50 million worth of backing from investors—at a valuation of $250 million, an almost unheard-of sum for a music venture in today's stingy venture capital environment. The European service also has the full support of the major labels, which reportedly negotiated a collective 18% stake in the company.

Yet this momentum will be tested severely as the company prepares to enter the United States—the No. 1 music market in the world—with a launch expected either late this year or early next, depending on how fast it completes its negotiations with the majors.

"It's been talked about so much I don't think it can meet everyone's expectations," says Forrester Research analyst Sonal Gandhi. "If the Spotify experience can be as good as hyped, it has a lot of potential."

With negotiations ongoing, U.S. labels are reluctant to comment on the service. According to music industry sources, the labels are impressed with Spotify's achievements but want the service to start generating real revenue. To do so, it must take care not to let the usage model outpace the business model.

There are certainly early signs of success. In August, Per Sundin, managing director of Universal Music Sweden, told the Swedish press that his company now earns more revenue from Spotify than iTunes. But that's in Sweden, where the service was born and where iTunes doesn't have the dominant hold on the digital music market it does elsewhere.

"We've seen income from Spotify follow a steep growth curve since launch," says Paul Smernicki, director of digital and direct-to-consumer at Universal U.K.'s Polydor Records. "Excluding mobile, they are pretty high up the list as a revenue stream for us. But we're certainly not in the same position as Sweden."

Scott Cohen, the London-based founder/VP of international at the digital distribution and marketing company the Orchard, says Spotify is already boosting income for labels in two ways.

"First, the more tracks are streamed on Spotify the more downloads occur on other services," he says. "We are not seeing any cannibalization. Second, revenue streams from advertising have been steadily increasing and have overtaken many niche stores in Europe."

But the ad-supported free service alone can't generate the revenue Spotify needs to pay for the music it plays. The company reported a net loss of $4 million last year, and its decision to limit its free service in the United Kingdom to invited guests implies a high burn rate.

That means Spotify has to increase the number of users for its premium service. So far, however, music subscription services like Rhapsody and Napster haven't been able to reach a mass audience. In its most recent quarterly earnings report, RealNetworks said Rhapsody has about 750,000 subscribers. Napster had 700,000 subscribers when Best Buy acquired the company last year, but hasn't released updated figures since.

While Spotify plans to make mobile access a key element of its conversion strategy, the mobile music market has also yet to take off. Spotify has confirmed it will launch in the United States with a "slightly different model" than in Europe, although it has yet to disclose details. >>>

THE AD-FUNDED MODEL

Calling Spotify a free ad-funded music streaming service would be accurate but unfair. The company has paying customers, but they number less than 10% of its user base, according to comments from CEO Daniel Ek at a recent London conference. And company executives say that's unlikely to change.

"We expect the large majority of our users to stay with free," says Gustav Söderström, who left his job as director of business development at Yahoo to join Spotify as its head of mobile. "We're monetizing it through ads and through selling downloads [through its partnership with 7digital], so it's a significant revenue source."

So far, no ad-funded service has been able to turn a profit from advertising and download revenue alone. Which is why Spotify doesn't intend to. Using the "freemium" model, the company hopes to convert a portion of its free user base to the premium tier.

The free Spotify service could be seen as a customer acquisition play—and perhaps not the most expensive one out there. Napster once estimated its customer acquisition cost at $100 per user, due to all the advertising needed to explain its subscription model.

"It makes the [customer acquisition] process easier than [it would be] if you start with no users," Söderström says. "You have to put a lot of marketing dollars into getting users' attention to even consider signing up. We don't have to do that."

Free access to any song on demand is powerful bait and Spotify offers what amounts to an indefinite trial period. Rhapsody and Napster usually limit their trial periods to about a week, after which users either need to pay or use only 30-second samples. (Rhapsody allows non-paying users to stream 25 free songs per month.) That may not be enough time to get users hooked on the access model.

Despite the popularity of Spotify's free tier in Europe, Rhapsody America VP of business management Neil Smith doubts it will roll out the same way stateside.

"The reason Spotify blew up so big and so fast was it was free," he says. "That model isn't going to happen in the U.S. anytime soon, maybe ever. The U.S. is the market where the labels make all their money. They can't afford to have a service that doesn't generate substantial revenue suck up all the usage. If it was $15 [per month] out of the gate, it wouldn't have a million users. Once you take the free piece away, we compete pretty well."

So Spotify will have to ensure its ad-supported service remains worthwhile and not degrade it in order to push users to the paid version. Devaluing the free service would risk losing users, which in turn would threaten its function as a customer acquisition tool as well as limit any hopes of generating revenue from it.

THE SUBSCRIPTION MODEL

For all the hype Spotify gets for the popularity of its free tier, there's no guarantee it can match that success as a paid service.

Until its mobile option launched, Spotify's premium tier only offered the elimination of ads—which weren't very intrusive to begin with—and slightly better audio quality. The iPhone and Android apps add portability to that mix, but it's still not much different in price or function to portable subscription offers from Rhapsody and Napster.

"The value proposition of subscription has to change," Forrester's Gandhi says. "There has to be ownership. There has to be something besides just renting music."

Gandhi specifically points to subscription plans that allow users to keep a certain number of songs per month, such as the five tracks Napster gives away as part of its $5-per-month streaming plan and Zune's 10 free downloads.

Another option comes from Pali Capital analyst Richard Greenfield, who recently suggested that mobile operators and Internet service providers should bundle the Spotify premium service into their data plans. The idea of bundling is nothing new, but Spotify's ability to synch content across the different platforms makes it a more viable option.

Söderström says Spotify would consider such options, but only if they weren't exclusive.

See Spotify run on multiple platforms: The company's Web interface (above) and mobile app (below)

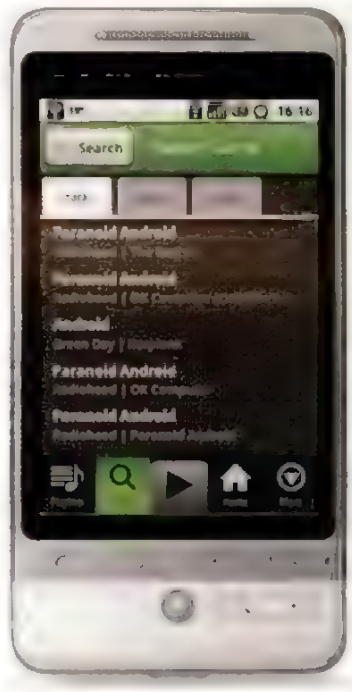
THE MOBILE MODEL

Spotify is hanging its hopes of converting free users to paid users on the mobile application. But it doesn't want to position itself as a mobile service.

"I wouldn't say Spotify is a mobile service first," Söderström says. "You're going to do the majority of your browsing and discovery on your desktop, at least for some time. But if you want to use Spotify as your primary music service, then you're going to need the mobile option."

Previous portable subscription options required transferring tracks from desktop to portable device, which users needed to synch with an online service at least once per month to refresh the licenses. Services were based on digital rights management technology from Microsoft that had a reputation for being unreliable—and the dominance of the iPod had made them irrelevant.

Spotify gets around this by using mobile phones to stream the music rather than download it. Since mobile networks are notoriously unreliable, it created a way to temporarily cache more than 3,000 songs on supporting mobile phones, without using the 10 GB of storage normally required to do so—although users must still connect to Spotify every 30 days to verify their premium subscriber status.



Mobile options have already paid huge dividends for music services like Slacker, Pandora and Clear Channel's iheartradio. Pandora, for example, says more than 45,000 of the 65,000 new registrations it gets every day come from its various mobile apps.

"Our future is going to be more mobile-centric than I had even thought, and sooner," Pandora founder Tim Westergren says.

But those are free applications. Rhapsody beat Spotify to the U.S. market with an iPhone app that lets users paying $15 per month stream any song from the service's catalog as well as their playlists and Internet radio stations, but to date it doesn't have a local caching option.

The U.S. mobile music market is also much tougher than that of Europe, where Spotify launched its mobile service in early September. According to a Forrester Research study, 27% of U.K. mobile subscribers with Internet access use their phone to play music at least monthly. In the United States, that figure is only 10%. U.S. mobile operators and labels alike hope Spotify will help goose these figures.

"There's definitely potential there," says one mobile operator. "I think we'll get the typical technology hype curve—lots of hype going into market, pause and then either decline or hype again based on reality. Spotify has a chance to be a big deal."

THE EUROPEAN MODEL

Spotify's European success is impressive, but the U.S. market can be more competitive—and more fickle.

"Spotify has a good chance of success in the States if they can make the right distribution partnerships," the Orchard's Cohen says. "But it will require a different strategy than in Europe."

And a win stateside would do much more than just cement Spotify as a legitimate player in the global digital music game. It will finally broaden the digital music market beyond iTunes and add a new usage model beyond track sales.

"Spotify is not the first streaming service in the world, just like iTunes wasn't the first digital download store," Cohen says. "What it does that is so special is make a fairly complex model seem easy to execute. They have a great team running the company and I wouldn't bet against them."

And while other U.S. music industry sources remain only cautiously optimistic, Spotify has confidence.

"There are certainly more music services in the U.S. than there are in Europe," Söderström says. "So, yes, it's more competitive. But I still think we have a better experience and a better offer. We wouldn't do it if we thought we were going to lose." ••••

CLASS ACTS

Campus Concerts Adjust To Tight Economy

BY MITCHELL PETERS

Live entertainment is still a major draw at university venues across the country, but the challenged economy in 2009 has forced some schools to cut back on student activities budgets designated for bringing musical acts and comedians to perform in campus buildings. As a result, many colleges are reviewing the types of acts they book as well as the frequency of campus concerts, industry observers say.

"The upper administration at colleges is definitely paying attention to budgets a little more due to this recession," says Todd Erickson, an agent at the More Music Group, a company that serves as the middle agent between colleges and talent. "I saw an impact from the economy for this fall semester . . . but think things will change back in the spring."

Jamie Kelsall, a booking agent at the Agency for the Performing Arts, says campus entertainment committees are spending their money more wisely. "They'll do two or three of the small [bands], rather than putting all their money into one act," Kelsall says, noting that the events are then transformed into a more festival-type environment. "It's certainly no surprise, because their budgets have definitely been cut."

In light of tighter entertainment budgets at many colleges, some developing artists have agreed to lower performance fees to play campuses and build stronger student fan bases, according to Jon Shyer, director at StarPolish Presents, another middle agent that assists colleges with booking concerts.

"They're definitely flexible on their numbers," Shyer says, declining to name specific acts. "[Booking agents] don't want to express that initially—because of negotiation reasons—but we get one e-mail a week saying, 'This band is looking to fill these dates.' "

Kelsall agrees that the challenged economy has forced some artists who rely heavily on touring as their primary source of revenue to re-evaluate how much they charge for shows.

"The smartest bands realize that in order to remain on the road, they have to work as much as they can with the buyer," says Kelsall, who books college-friendly acts like Jack's Mannequin, Eric Hutchinson, Three 6 Mafia, Flo Rida, Flogging Molly and the Gaslight Anthem.

In addition to being more flexible with guarantees, many artists offer additional services to colleges, including lectures and afternoon performances.

"Numerous artists are willing to come to schools early and promote their show by playing a small acoustic performance to bring more students to the show," Shyer says. "And from our roster, the Kicks and Craig Cardiff use their experience in the music business to teach students in a two-part lecture and performance on college campuses."

Adam Tobey, senior VP at the middle agent company Concert Ideas, says more colleges are booking comedians because their material is viewed as a sure bet, compared with hit-driven music acts.

College events featuring comedians from popular TV shows usually result in successful ticket sales, because students are more likely to attend events that are tied to something they're familiar with, according to Erickson.

"For marketing purposes, if [the act is] from a TV show, everybody will know that show and they'll be drawn to it, whether it's someone from 'Saturday Night Live' or a half-hour comedy special on Comedy Central," he says, citing a recent show with "SNL" comic Kenan Thompson.

Booking comedy is also sometimes a safer move because it has a wide appeal to students from all walks of life. "Everybody loves to laugh," Erickson says. "So with comedy, it's not like you're trying to appeal to a certain person who may like hard rock or hip-hop and R&B."

Even top-priced comics are considered a safer economic play. The 17,000-seat Frank Erwin Center at the University of Texas in Austin saw recent success with such top-name comedians as Robin Williams, George Lopez and Jeff Dunham. "Those major comics seem to play pretty well in this environment," says center director John Graham, who also cites upcoming shows by Dane Cook and Larry the Cable Guy.

Even in a tough economy, campuses are an attractive target for top music acts, such as Jay-Z, whose 20-plus-date fall tour will primarily play college arenas.

Frank Russo, senior VP of business development and client services at the facility management firm Global Spectrum, says business is growing at the 10 university venues the company manages. But digital marketing is key, "as opposed to radio, TV and newspapers," he says. E-mail blasts for events are effective, he adds, noting that students "live in their own world" and are difficult to reach through traditional forms of advertising. So Global Spectrum often works with student entertainment committees to find alternative methods of spreading the word. "You have to resort to different ways to get them aware of shows, which might even be putting chalk on the sidewalk on the paths from dorms to classrooms," Russo says.

Other colleges are taking a similar grass-roots approach to reaching students on campus. At Clemson University in South Carolina, concert organizers have moved the box office for the 10,000-seat Littlejohn Coliseum to various hubs on the school's campus. "They don't even have to get in the car—we're where they want to be," coliseum GM/director of major events Marty Kern says. To help sell tickets to shows, Kern advises her students to "get in front of the library late at night where we know the students are," she says. "It's in-your-face, old-school marketing." ••••

Agencies Address Top Challenges In Today's Market

BY RAY WADDELL

The booking agent's job has always been complex. Efficiently routing tours; choosing the correct time, promoter, venue, capacity and market; and cutting intricate deals with talent buyers, buildings and producers are painstaking tasks in the simplest of times. ¶ Despite the old joke about agents, this has never been about throwing darts at a map. But in today's concert industry, when one asks agents what the most pressing issues are that they face, the answer is more likely to be about mergers, 360 deals, new models, dynamic pricing and secondary-market ticketing than moving the act from point A to point B.

Like promoters and management companies, agencies have evolved into multilevel entertainment companies. The major agencies are making moves into the label business and other areas of the content world beyond live performance. Many agencies are more involved in marketing than ever.

Ultimately the agents' biggest concern remains building headliners and "selling tickets," according to Marsha Vlasic, senior VP at International Creative Management and head of ICM's contemporary rock department.

"Selling tickets," she repeats. "Developing new artists. Creative marketing. Those are my issues."

Marc Geiger, contemporary music head at William Morris Endeavor, says that ticket pricing, the "altering of the secondary market" and the proposed merger of industry giants Live Nation and Ticketmaster Entertainment all loom large as important issues today.

The Agency Group agent Ken Fermaglich cites the economy and 360 deals as concerns, particularly as the latter relates to labels entering the concert business. "As labels sign more bands to 360 deals, and therefore have a small piece of the touring, the label being the promoter, too, could be an issue," he says.

Other agents echo that sentiment. "I'm really concerned how labels are involving themselves in touring," ICM agent Dennis Ashley says. "I'm not sure that this would always be in the best interests of the artist."

Vlasic thinks the trend toward multirights deals will "filter out," but she's not as quick to dismiss the impact of a Ticketmaster/Live Nation merger. "It's something we really need to be concerned about," she says.

Rob Beckham, Nashville-based agent for William Morris, agrees that artist development is a concern. "The biggest problem I see in the country business is the lack of developing headliners," he says. "We had Taylor Swift blow up and take the world by storm. She is an amazing star and has worked very hard to become the headliner she is."

But Swift is the exception rather than the norm. "Because album sales have come down so far, and singles take much longer to be hits, we just have a very difficult road ahead in developing those arena-type headliners," Beckham says. "There will be others that emerge, but nothing like we have seen in the past 10-15 years."

Like other agents, Bruce Houghton, president of the Skyline Agency, sees ticketing as a thorny issue. "Less-than-transparent ticketing fees that drive from >>p24 up prices are frustrating consumers and destroying efforts by artists, managers and agents to create value for the fans," Houghton says.

Joey Lee, president of the 360 Artist Agency, says fees are particularly an issue with "bubbling headliners"—acts moving up to larger venues that don't yet have the clout to negotiate a break with ticketing companies, venues and advertisers.

Paradigm agent Aaron Pinkus says the live business overall hasn't done a good job in developing new acts to back up the heritage artists that have been the core of the touring industry for years. "So the onus on the agency side is to develop new talent at an affordable cost that will get butts transferred from couches into stadium seating," he says. "To that end, we are getting killed by ticketing service charges."

While he understands the costs of rolling out a new ticketing system or operating an existing one, "I still can't understand how it costs $8.35 to process what was originally a $10 general admission ticket for a 500-capacity club show," Pinkus says. "And as the venue sizes increase, so does the ticket price, and consequently the service charge."

When it comes to high ticket prices in general, "as agents, we have had a large hand in creating this problem," Pinkus says. "We have driven guarantees to the point where promoters could not break even on a show solely based on ticket sales. Promoters were forced 'underground' into making their money through ancillary means; hot dogs, beer and ticketing service charge rebates. So we don't back down from guarantees, and promoters don't back down from ticketing fees, because everyone needs their money, and we're effectively in a stalemate."

That status quo has to change, especially at the developmental level, Pinkus asserts. "Maybe that means we don't push for the same guarantee in exchange for lower ticketing charges, but I can tell you something has to be done to prevent the first concert by any new band in any given market to have more than 50% of their ticket price going towards service fees," he says. "It's killing the goose before it's out of the egg, and there are a ton of talented bands that will not get the chance to turn into the proverbial golden goose if we out-price them in the market as they try to plant their flag in your town and in your mind."

Industry cuts have led to less effective promotion of artists, Houghton believes. "Who is left to market the shows in more than a cookie-cutter fashion?" he asks before answering his own question. "No one—promoters, managers or agents—has been willing to fill that void."

Though attendance largely held its own, the summer of 2009 did see an industry-wide trend of consumers waiting longer to buy tickets. William Morris agent Kirk Sommer would like to see advance sales stimulated through premium inventory incentives with presales and such old-school (but effective) messaging to the public as "only area performance" or "last area performance" if these statements are in fact true. Sommer says increasing demand by being more conservative in choosing venue capacity, earlier on-sales and keeping ticketing programs to a minimum could also help advance sales.

One of the most pressing issues for 2010 will continue to be ticket scaling for new and established touring artists, according to agent David Zedeck of Creative Artists Agency.

"It is important that we take the lessons learned from this past year, which was arguably the toughest economy in 30 years, and understand what worked and what didn't—for the artists, the promoters and fans," Zedeck says. "We need to continually work to market and sell tickets to the fervent fan, as well as the casual fan."

Brian Jones, VP at the Bobby Roberts Co., sees today's market as "too many artists looking for work and not enough ticket buyers who will pay the amount for a ticket it takes to cover promoting the show," he says. "Like many products in today's economy, it's a buyer's market. The fans are in control."

Still, Jones says he's not overly concerned about the long-term viability of live entertainment. "People will always go to live shows; it's just finding the right formula to make it affordable for the promoter, artist and the ticket buyer," he says. "We've all adjusted, and we will adjust some more."

TAKING IT TO THE CLUBS

Live Nation Debuts Strategies For Smaller Venues

Clubs and small venues are the lifeblood of the concert business. It's where acts create buzz, hone their chops and build the foundation of a touring career. Historically, promoters were willing to make less or even lose money on an act at the club level with hopes that the artist will stay loyal as it climbed the ladder into larger venues, reaping more profits in the process.

Live Nation is now following its summer promotional schedule for its amphitheaters with two new club-level promotions.

The first, which the company describes as more of a new "product" than a promotion, is the Club Passport. For $49.99, including fees, music fans who purchase a passport can see every show at Live Nation clubs in their city for the rest of the year, subject to availability. A source at Live Nation says sales of the Club Passport are "solid."

On Oct. 5, Live Nation announced a second club-level price promotion, a "two-for-one" deal that will encompass 200,000 tickets to 350 concerts in 29 U.S. Live Nation venues.

The company says its No Service Fee promotions at amphitheaters saved fans about $14 million on nearly 800,000 tickets during the summer. The Live Nation source says the club programs are a response to requests from agents and managers for the promoter to offer similar inducements for small venue tours. Both programs are available at Live Nation's House of Blues and Fillmore clubs across the country, as well as Live Nation clubs like Bogart's in Cincinnati, the Tabernacle in Atlanta, the Gramercy in New York and the Hollywood (Calif.) Palladium.

Among the acts playing venues covered by the Passport, according to LiveNation.com, are the Black Crowes, the B-52s, Tesla, Gov't Mule, Hanson, Andrew Bird and others.

Meanwhile, the club sector seems pretty healthy, even in tough economic times.

Seth Hurwitz, president of independent promoter I.M.P., which owns and books the 9:30 Club in Washington, D.C., says he hasn't seen a downturn. "The shows that people want to see do well and the ones that don't, don't," he says. "Bands run their cycles of popularity, and when that is down, bands and their representatives like to blame the economy. Sorry, that ain't it."

Hurwitz says he doesn't spend much time developing price promotions. "Fact is, I've never seen [price promotions] turn a dog show around. They are usually done to placate someone who refuses to believe that their act isn't selling tickets or to create cash flow for reasons other than net business."

It's more about "promotion" in the true sense of the word, according to Hurwitz. "Our responsibility as a promoter is to get the band's image and music represented as they intend and to make sure everyone is aware and reminded about the show," he says. "After that, the campaign has been run and the votes come in."

There are plenty of acts to "vote" for, certainly. Kirk Sommer, the William Morris Endeavor agent for acts like the Killers and Paolo Nutini, says the clubs are "completely oversaturated at the moment." The current economy means people have less discretionary income and more entertainment options, Sommer says. And he observes that there isn't any sign of less traffic in the future.

"People need to pay particular attention to packaging, timing, size and ticket pricing," Sommer adds. "There must be value."

Red Ryder Entertainment agent Erik Selz (Andrew Bird) says he isn't seeing the artist development at the club level he once did, or even consistency. "A few years back, one could rely on a sold-out show in March, on the heels of a new release, translating into a sold-out show at a larger venue in September," he says. " 'Here today, gone tomorrow' has never been more true, and I'm seeing those September shows, on the second lap through a market, suffer badly. The saturation doesn't help, and it's only getting worse." ••••

ROCK | BY DEBORAH EVANS PRICE

LIFE AFTER DEATH

Flyleaf Confronts Mortality On Its Second Album

When Flyleaf chose to call its second album "Memento Mori," it wasn't a tossed-off phrase or an attempt at pretension. After a spate of tragedies and illnesses, the band's mindfulness of death is a constant theme on the album, which will be released Oct. 20 on Octone/A&M.

" 'Memento Mori' was very fitting, given everything we've been through over the past seven years," singer Lacey Mosley says. "We've seen a lot of everything."

Certainly, the band has seen plenty of success. Its self-titled debut was released in 2005, spawning the hit singles "I'm So Sick," "Fully Alive" and "All Around Me." The album stayed on the Billboard 200 for 133 weeks and sold 1.2 million copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. In 2006, the Texas band released the four-song EP "Music As a Weapon," and the following year it issued a limited-edition two-disc version of "Flyleaf."

Rather than rush to release new music, the band (Mosley, guitarists Sameer Bhattacharya and Jared Hartman, drummer James Culpepper and bassist Pat Seals) focused on touring. Mosley says the primary reason the band took so long between albums was that the group wanted to tour heavily and get to know its fans.

The delay was also exacerbated by members coping with personal tragedies: Bhattacharya's 22-year-old cousin battled cancer, Culpepper lost his mother and his aunt, and Mosley had a health scare.

"There was a possibility that I might have an illness, but it ended up that I came out fine," she says. "It was a possibility that I might have cancer. I don't want it to be a big deal."

But in the next breath, Mosley reveals that the scare affected her lyrics. "It was just a situation that shook me and made me think, 'Is this what I want to live my life for?' " she says. "Am I living my life for the right thing? If I died tomorrow, would I be satisfied or would God be satisfied if I met him tomorrow? That's the whole point behind 'Memento Mori.' I hope it's not too depressing.

"The thing that is so phenomenal about getting to record music or write a story or take photographs or whatever is that you can look back and remember that time and be filled with that purpose again," she adds. "I'm so glad we got to do that."

When the band decided to head back to the studio, it again turned to producer Howard Benson. "He's always looking for ways to make a song a pop song," Mosley says, "and we're always looking for a way to push that boundary so that it makes him happy but it also makes us happy creatively as artists and rock lovers. I think you could hear both of that."

To promote the new album, Flyleaf took its usual "fans first" stance and let them decide the cities where the band would perform before the release. "There's so much more to these shows than just the band playing an acoustic set," Octone/A&M marketing director Val Pensa says. "Fans will get to see the video premieres of the two videos [for the first single, "Again," and a track called "Beautiful Bride"] before anyone will ever be able to see them online or on TV, they'll be able to listen to six or seven songs from the new record, and they'll have a chance to preorder the album."

Pensa says there will be a deluxe edition available, with four additional tracks, and an iTunes special release. "Fans who preorder will get an instant free track, 'Beautiful Bride,' " Pensa says, "and they'll also have the opportunity to get a digital booklet, the video and a cover of 'Stay' by U2."

"Again" is being promoted to active rock and alternative radio and is No. 28 on Billboard's Alternative chart and No. 21 at Active Rock.

Though not generally categorized as a Christian band, the members are Christian and have attracted a Christian fan base. Therefore, Octone has enlisted EMI Christian Music Group to market and distribute the album to the faith-based market.

Mosley is confident that both believers and nonbelievers will be able to relate to the message of "Memento Mori." "The album is about recognizing that our life is short and precious and the people's lives around you are short and precious as well," she says. "It might be your last opportunity to talk to them and it might make you choose your words more carefully." ••••

>>>'IDOL' GIVES BACK AGAIN

"American Idol" is bringing back its "Idol Gives Back" charitable special April 21 after a yearlong hiatus. The special, airing during the top-seven Wednesday results show, will benefit Children's Health Fund, Feeding America, Malaria No More, Save the Children and the United Nations Foundation. More than $140 million was raised in two previous specials. "AI" will return for a ninth season in January with host Ryan Seacrest and judges Simon Cowell, Randy Jackson, Kara DioGuardi and Ellen DeGeneres.

>>>UNRELEASED JACKSON 5 SONGS ON ITUNES

Motown/Universal Music Enterprises is celebrating the 40th anniversary of the Jackson 5's first single with "I Want You Back! Unreleased Masters," a new collection of 12 vault recordings due Nov. 10. A single, "That's How Love Is," was released Oct. 6 on iTunes; the song was written and produced by the Corporation, the team that wrote the Jackson 5's early material, and has been remixed by original Motown engineer Russ Terrana. Motown/UMe is also releasing "The Jackson 5 Ultimate Christmas Collection" Oct. 13.

>>>GNR SUED FOR PLAGIARISM

Two independent labels have sued Guns N' Roses for $1 million, claiming the group used portions of two songs by a German musician on the band's last album, "Chinese Democracy." The band and Universal Music Group's Interscope Geffen A&M label were sued by the British label Independiente and the U.S. arm of Domino Recording, which own the licensing rights to songs by German electronic musician Ulrich Schnauss. According to the lawsuit, singer Axl Rose, his bandmates and album producers copied portions of Schnauss' "Wherever You Are" and "A Strangely Isolated Place" for the song "Riad N' the Bedouins."

Bringing beards to the masses: DEVENDRA BANHART

ROCK | BY EVIE NAGY

Trading Up

Devendra Banhart And Warner Take Freak Folk To The FM Masses

"I can see my songs in a movie," Devendra Banhart says, "as long as it's a movie no one will watch." The singer/songwriter, who says his eclectic, world-influenced folk rock is usually considered more "exotic, esoteric or idiosyncratic" than commercially focused, will release his major-label debut, "What Will We Be," Oct. 27 on Warner Bros. Records.

After releasing five studio albums and several EPs on independent labels, Banhart says the transition to a major occurred for almost counterintuitive reasons. "They were the only ones who offered to let me do what I want," he says, adding that "What Will We Be" was nearly completed before it was shopped, and it was important to sign with a label that wouldn't make changes to the music. "You think an indie, yeah, they just let you do anything and you're in control, that's the heart of it, that's the point," says Banhart, who released previous albums on Young Gods and XL Recordings. "But I think with the birth of a new business model in the music industry, it's led the majors to actually be kind of humbled, so I was shocked they were treating me like the indies when I was meeting with them and the indies were talking to me like a major."

Warner Bros. executive VP of marketing Diarmuid Quinn says that signing Banhart was as much about "having him in the family because of his sensibilities" as the specific material he brought to the table. "There are some artists who are more commerce-driven than others, who have more mainstream success, and then there are some artists who are just brilliant who we need to have here to keep a certain artistic sentiment thriving, and Devendra fits that perfectly," Quinn says. "He's a true artist, his music is genius, his visual art is incredible."

Visuals were a key issue for Banhart in his deal with Warner. A visual artist as well as a musician, he designs all of his own album artwork and insisted on the right to approve all images associated with the release. "It's funny, because on the smaller labels, so much media would leak out that I had no control of and didn't approve," he says.

Banhart's manager Elliott Roberts was instrumental in the pairing, as he also manages Neil Young, a longtime Warner artist. "He's like an interpreter who speaks the label's language very well, and that's a helpful thing because it's a language I just don't understand," Banhart says.

While the marketing plan will focus on the album as a whole, the radio campaign will focus on the lead track, "Baby," a breezy love song that, according to Quinn, "everybody felt was a pretty accessible step for him, while maintaining what he does so well and his identity." The song will go to triple A, noncommercial and college radio stations Oct. 13; a video for it will follow the album release. Touring plans include major-market dates in November, as well as a European press tour in December, due to "fantastic international feedback to the music," Quinn says.

As for Banhart, it's clear that marketing isn't his primary concern. "Whether I'm on a major or an indie, I don't think this is important, but at the same time I do," he says. "I thought that the minute I was on a major's roster, I got a key to everyone's house and we all had dinner once a week . . . it kind of wasn't so true and it was disappointing, but I still believe there's a connection to those people and you feel like a part of something." ••••

Florence & The Machine Surf U.K. Success

Not many artists get to win awards before they've even recorded an album, let alone released one.

But having picked up the BRIT Awards' Critics' Choice prize in January while still in the studio working on her debut album, Florence Welch of the current U.K. chart sensations Florence & the Machine didn't shed too many tears when the finished product missed out on the Barclaycard Mercury Prize to the U.K. rapper Speech Debelle (Billboard.biz, Sept. 8).

"I could do without it, to be honest," Welch says with a smile. "It would have been a bit too much. I don't think I could handle it."

The act's debut set, "Lungs"—released by Island July 6 in the United Kingdom and making its full U.S. bow Oct. 20 on Universal Republic after being available on iTunes since July 7—may have arrived on a wave of hype. But at home, sales have lived up to those expectations. The album has sold 253,000 copies, according to the Official Charts Co., and was only kept from No. 1 by Michael Jackson.

"Lungs" is a beguiling mix of haunting melodies, rich orchestration and Welch's Kate Bush-esque vocals, illustrated on punky guitar stompers like "Kiss With a Fist"; more rhythmic, electronic songs like "Rabbit Heart (Raise It Up)" and "Drumming Song"; and a show-stopping cover of Candi Staton's "You Got the Love," retitled "You've Got the Love."

It's a combination that Kim Garner, Universal Republic senior VP of marketing and artist development, expects to go down well stateside after the digital release—which has sold 7,000

>>>MANX CAT

The artists found on Billboard's Top Blues Albums chart come from all over the United States, but rarely from the Isle of Man. Singer/guitarist Davy Knowles and his band Back Door Slam might hail from the tiny island in the Irish Sea off the coast of northern England, but his reputation is growing across the States.

Named after a Robert Cray song, the group has played some 400 gigs in the past two years, supporting such acts as the Who and Buddy Guy. Those gigs helped its second Blix Street album, "Coming Up for Air," hit No. 2 on Top Blues Albums in July. In his first production for another artist, the album was helmed by fellow Brit Peter Frampton.

Knowles says his birthplace is a frequent talking point in the United States, "but it's probably helped, more than anything. There must be hundreds of American guys doing the same thing, but because I'm Manx [from the Isle of Man], it kind of stands out."

Northern soul: DAVY KNOWLES

Blix Street, to which Knowles and Back Door Slam are signed worldwide, is readying a Nov. 9 U.K. release, with Europe following in January. The label is distributed by the Alternative Distribution Alliance in the United Kingdom, Ireland and the United States; Universal in Canada; and various other copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan—built plenty of buzz among media tastemakers.

The campaign begins in earnest this month when Welch makes her first major U.S. trip to play Creative Artists Agency-booked shows at New York's Bowery Ballroom (Oct. 27) and Los Angeles' Troubadour (Oct. 30). Appearances on "Late Show With David Letterman," "Jimmy Kimmel Live!" and MTV's "It's On With Alexa Chung" have also been booked for release week.

At radio, sessions are scheduled for KCRW Los Angeles and New York's WFUV and WRXP. "Rabbit Heart" has gone to triple A radio while "Kiss With a Fist" has been serviced to alternative—a two-pronged approach that Garner says will maximize exposure for the artist.

"She's not a pure pop artist," Garner says. "She's a little left of center, yet her record is accessible enough that a wide demographic of people will really like it once they're exposed to it."

At retail, Best Buy will carry an exclusive deluxe version of "Lungs" featuring a bonus DVD, while iTunes will launch a different deluxe version of the album Oct. 20.

Garner cites Florence & the Machine's "phenomenal" live show as a key piece of her arsenal. Welsh wrapped her latest U.K. tour with a three-night stand Sept. 27-29 at London's Shepherds Bush Empire. She plays European dates throughout October before further U.K. dates in December and a full U.S. tour in spring 2010.

"I'm just surfing the wave of whatever is going on here," Welch says. "What I'm really happy about with this album is that people have really listened to it objectively, felt something from it and taken it to heart." ...

"Coming Up for Air" is also making inroads in Australia, where the band will play Perth's One Movement Festival Oct. 17, after a London show at the Borderline Oct. 7.

>>>OSIBISA BUSY

Long before the term "world music" was coined, Osibisa was taking its energetic blend of African, Caribbean, disco, rock and jazz musical fusions across the world. Now the band, formed in 1969 in London, is back, still led by Ghanaian-born multi-instrumentalist Teddy Osei.

Osibisa's first two albums, "Osibisa" and "Woyaya" (MCA, both released in 1971), hit No. 11 in the United Kingdom. But later albums on various labels failed to repeat that success, and the group eventually disbanded. Osei put together a new lineup in 1996, releasing "Monsore" (1996), "Aka Kakra" (2000) and "African Dawn, African Flight" (2003) on the U.K. indie Red Steel.

The band's first studio album in six years, "Osee Yee" (Golden Stool/Cadiz), gets a U.K. release Oct. 19, rolling out in Europe the same week. A U.S. release through E1 follows Oct. 27.

A compilation, "The Very Best of Osibisa," will be issued simultaneously with the new album. "We thought we'd celebrate our 40 years by releasing 'The Very Best Of,' and at the same time, give our fans our new album," Osei says. The new set includes an Afro-jazz-tinged cover of George Harrison's "My Sweet Lord"—"A song I've always loved," Osei says.

The band is published by Osibisounds. It's booked by the U.K.-based Tomtom Music and will tour internationally during 2010. —Kwaku

>>>STACKED UP

Short Stack's mastery of social networking has paid off Down Under.

Hailing from Budgewoi in New South Wales, the teenagers bowed at No. 1 on the Aug. 23 Australian Recording Industry Assn. albums chart with their debut, "Stack Is the New Black," a feat achieved largely without conventional marketing.

The trio galvanized an enormous teenage fan base on YouTube, where its homemade "Short Stack TV" episodes have been viewed more than 2.5 million times. The act's MySpace streams have generated more than 4 million plays, and fans cast 400,000-plus votes to anoint the band music TV specialist Channel [V]'s artist of the year in 2008.

"They were the first band in Australia to grab hold of social networking and make it work," says Trevor Steel, CEO of Short Stack's label, Sunday Morning Records, which licensed the album to Universal Music Australia. "Radio and TV haven't been hot on us, but they're catching up. We've done it all ourselves."

The band's focus is currently domestic, but Steel says work is under way on a follow-up album, which he aims to introduce to the U.S. market. Short Stack's self-published works are administered by Mushroom Music in Australia. The Harbour Agency has booked the band's third national tour, beginning Dec. 11.

6 QUESTIONS

with GLEN HANSARD

by JILLIAN MAPES

Irish folk-rock duo the Swell Season is perhaps more commonly known as the duo from "Once," the 2007 indie musical that won critical acclaim and a number of awards, including the Academy Award for best original song. But Glen Hansard, who also fronts Irish rock band the Frames, and his partner Marketa Irglova are determined to move past their film notoriety with the release of their follow-up to the "Once" soundtrack, "Strict Joy."

Out Oct. 27 on Anti-, the album features the soulful single "Low Rising," which sounds more like Van Morrison than the delicately melancholy acoustic songs that first made the duo famous.

1 You were just in Africa. What were you doing there?

Edward Norton is running this conversation camp for the Maasai Tribe in Kenya. Among many of the great people that we've come across in this whole madness of what happened to us after "Once," there were a couple of people that stuck and became pals. I'm very happy to say that he's one of them.

2 "Strict Joy" shares its title with a James Stephens poem. Did his writing influence the album?

James Stephens just hit me between the teeth on "Strict Joy" with the idea that the poet makes grief beautiful. When you really care for your grief and channel it through song or through art, if you do it right, oftentimes the art that you make doesn't emit sadness but it emits beauty. I've often battled with the idea that I go onstage and sing about stuff that's wrong with me and people pay money to hear those songs.

3 On the new album you worked with producer Peter Katis, who's known for working with indie rock acts like the National and Interpol. Did he push "Strict Joy" in that direction musically?

Peter has a very strong personality, but he knows when to step down from a fight. He's definitely an indie rocker, and we did have a little trouble with that initially. I wanted to make an Elton John record and was influenced by early-'70s stuff. There were times when Peter's eyes glazed over for sure, but there were times when he would get really excited.

4 You've worked on two soundtracks. Is writing for that medium something you particularly enjoy?

I completely stumbled into working on soundtracks. One of the first questions I was asked after "Once" got big was, "So when are you moving to L.A.? You've got to move to L.A. to write songs for movies." I was like, "No, no, no. I'm a guy in a band." Then I was invited to move to Nashville to be involved with one of those songwriting circles—to be a part of Tin Pan Alley, essentially—writing songs for famous people. I was asked to write for Miley Cyrus and to me that was hilarious. I was delighted to be asked, but of course I didn't. It doesn't feel natural to the path I've always seen myself on as a musician.

5 You weren't originally cast to act in "Once" and only did so after Cillian Murphy dropped out. Would you try acting again?

I'd be very happy to act again—I really enjoyed "Once"—but me, [director] John Carney and Marketa were pals. I wonder to myself if I would be able to act otherwise because I was pretty much playing myself. It was very natural for me to take out a guitar and play on the street and hang out with Mar, who was already a friend of mine. As proud as I am of "Once," it doesn't give me much confidence as an actor because we are just drinking beers and bluffing. I've had a few offers to be in films, but all of them have been for me to play a charming Irish guy who plays guitar, which I wouldn't do again.

6 The Swell Season won an Oscar for the song "Falling Slowly"—and has been immortalized in an episode of "The Simpsons." Which was more surprising?

"The Simpsons," of course. "The Simpsons" is the one thing that binds the world together in a way. People don't watch the Oscars necessarily in India, but they watch "The Simpsons." What really struck me was that they were doing a little bit of a joke on "Once," but "Once" was a tiny film in the world. It did OK in America, but in the world of cinema, it hardly got recognized. I said this to the people at "The Simpsons" and they said, "We don't care. If we like something, we'll parody it. It's up to the rest of the world to figure out what we're parodying." When you've been on "The Simpsons," you know something has shifted. ....

Pink Elephant
Producer: Leon Sylvers III
Stax Records/Concord
Release Date: Oct. 6

Singer/songwriter N'Dambi has been a darling of the indie-soul movement since the release of her 1999 debut, "Little Lost Girls Blues." With the arrival of her major-label debut, "Pink Elephant," the mainstream audience can finally hear her gut-rousing brand of soul. A former backup singer for Erykah Badu, N'Dambi possesses a rich, earthy voice that grabs the listener from the very first note. Coupled with lyrics that keenly observe life's frequent ironies, her vocals add a striking depth to each song. Helping the singer pleasingly bridge her contemporary and classic soul influences is R&B veteran Leon Sylvers. Whether discoursing on pursuing your dreams ("Nobody Jones"), reaffirming the bonds of love ("What It Takes") or sarcastically bemoaning the inability to sever a bad relationship ("Can't Hardly Wait"), N'Dambi proves that she's every bit the real deal—one of the talented few who can truly make the listener feel a song.—GM

POP

LIGHTS

The Listening
Producers: various
Warner Bros. Records
Release Date: Oct. 6

Canadian singer Valerie Poxleitner looks like a pop star and writes songs like a pop star, but her name didn't make her sound like much of a pop star. A quick change to the snappier moniker Lights, though, and she's ready to actually be a pop star, at least as evidenced by her major-label debut, "The Listening." Building on a well-received EP and some low-budget, space-age videos, the new album comes on like a more accessible version of the current buzz-worthy wave of U.K. electronic artists including Little Boots and La Roux. Exuberant vocoder vocals pepper the album, most notably on the current single "Savior," which is reminiscent of the U.K. act Saint Etienne. Most tracks on the set are irresistibly catchy, from the "I tried to do you right" refrain of "Ice" to the danced-up beats of "Loins!" The singer's early Canadian radio hits—"Drive My Soul" and "February Air"—also appear on the album, along with the gorgeous ballad "Pretend," which is presented in both frosty electronic and warm piano versions.—MS

JOSS STONE

Colour Me Free
Producers: various
Virgin Records
Release Date: Oct. 20

On "Free Me," the lead single from Joss Stone's fourth studio album, "Colour Me Free," the U.K. singer indirectly addresses critics who've suggested that her sound isn't wholly original. "There's nothing that you can't do/'Cause it's all about your attitude/Don't let them get to you," she growls assertively on the track. The notion that swagger trumps all seems to have guided Stone throughout her career—and it's no different on "Colour Me Free." She continues to hit each note with the precise amount of retro pomp that one would expect, and there are again moments when the '70s soul love affair gets a little carried away. The arrangement of the song "Parallel Lines" is every bit like Stevie Wonder's "Higher Ground," and the protest "Governmentalist" (featuring rapper Nas) may as well be about Vietnam. Elsewhere, the sublime track "Big Ole Game" (featuring fellow soul revivalist Raphael Saadiq) almost sounds like an old Al Green recording. But what's the harm in that?—MH

TIM McGRAW

Southern Voice
Producers: Byron Gallimore, Tim McGraw, Darran Smith
Curb Records
Release Date: Oct. 20

Tim McGraw is one introspective SOB, or so it seems on his latest album, "Southern Voice." He doesn't reveal any new sides to his personality on the mostly down-tempo set, but he does prove that when it rains, it pours. On the song "If I Died Today," the singer wonders who would or wouldn't miss him after death, while "I Didn't Know It at the Time" ponders the knowledge that life brings. "You Had to Be There" is a reflection of living without a father and "Love You Goodbye" is more of the same. Standout tracks include "Ghost Town Train," which echoes the work of Glen Campbell, and "Good Girls," a dark tale of cheating with an unexpected twist. On "I'm Only Jesus," McGraw offers an interesting take on personal responsibility while singing from the perspective of Jesus Christ. "Southern Voices" is done well overall, but listeners may want to keep close a copy of McGraw's upbeat hit "I Like It, I Love It" to lighten the mood.—KT

BRANDI CARLILE

Give Up the Ghost
Producer: Jason Lader
Columbia Records
Release Date: Oct. 6

Brandi Carlile knows how to wring every last emotion from a lyric. On her third studio album, "Give Up the Ghost," the singer/songwriter channels heartache, fear, nostalgia and joy in nearly the same breath, creating a vivid pastiche of alt-folk pop. The best evidence of this is found on the song "Before It Breaks," a haunting post-breakup ballad full of Robert Frost-like imagery, where she sorrowfully sings, "Will the collar on my coat, Lord help me, kill off the cold/Will the rain drops sting my eyes or keep them closed?" By contrast, the uptempo track "Caroline" soars merrily, with a welcome cameo on vocals and piano by Elton John. Meanwhile, the cut "Touching the Ground" is more subtle but no less arresting as Carlile sings over simple guitar strums, "Why do my troubles turn true/Whenever I rest my eyes on you?" "Give Up the Ghost" is another rich offering from this distinctive female talent.—MH

COUNTRY

LUKE BRYAN

Doin' My Thing
Producer: Jeff Stevens
Capitol Nashville
Release Date: Oct. 6

Luke Bryan's recent single "Do I" (which first appeared on his latest EP and is now on his second album, "Doin' My Thing") is a bona fide three-hanky lost-love ballad. But the listener won't be sniffling through the spirited 11-song "Doin' My Thing," which begins with the winking witticisms of the Brad Paisley-like song "Rain Is a Good Thing," followed by the buoyant pop of the title track. "Welcome to the Farm" is kind of a contemporary take on "Green Acres" that blends Bryan's country and rock sides, and the cover of OneRepublic's "Apologize" allows the singer to explore more soulful territory. Meanwhile, "Drinkin' Beer and Wastin' Bullets" is a hard-driving Southern rocker about deer hunting, while "Every Time I See You" and "Chuggin' Along" should keep Bryan's country credentials in good standing.—GG

JOE PERRY

Have Guitar, Will Travel Producer: Joe Perry
Roman Records
Release Date: Oct. 6

At the beginning of 2009, Joe Perry didn't plan to record a solo album, but the guitarist wound up making the most fully realized set he's created outside of Aerosmith. Started after Steven Tyler's health problems halted sessions for the band's next album, "Have Guitar, Will

DEAD BY SUNRISE

Out of Ashes
Producers: Howard Benson, Chester Bennington
Warner Bros. Records
Release Date: Oct. 13

There's a question that lingers when listening to the debut album from Dead by Sunrise, the new project from Linkin Park's Chester Bennington: What can he do musically in this setting that he can't in his day job? The answer, apparently, is quite a bit. Bennington's emotive vocals and a similar quiet-to-loud dynamic identify Dead by Sunrise with Linkin Park, but "Out of Ashes" is grittier and more punk-driven. This is best displayed on the punchy groove of "Crawl Back In," the blistering cadence driving "Inside of Me," the three-chord attack of "My Suffering" and the butt-kicking rock of "End of the World." Bennington and his Dead by Sunrise bandmates (who hail from the electronic rock band Julien-K) also display a deft touch with atmospherics and textures on tracks like "Too Late," "Give Me Your Name" and the goth-tinged "Let Down," among others. On the opening track, "Fire," Bennington searches for "a way to keep my pain from burning down to the bone." But his agony is the listener's sonic gain, so let it burn.—GG

THE BILLBOARD REVIEWS

SINGLES

Travel" finds Perry following up his self-titled 2005 album with 10 songs that travel happily and energetically, from the sinewy synthesizer groove of "We've Got a Long Way to Go" to the blues-rooted shuffles of "Slingshot" and "No Surprise." "Do You Wonder" is a rootsy number, while the instrumental "Wooden Ships" is a dedication to the late Les Paul. Perry gets strong backing from a cast that includes German singer Hagen (a YouTube find), periodic Aerosmith fill-in bassist David Hull and drummer Ben Tileston. Perry tosses out a few lyrical messages in tracks like "Freedom," the hymn-like "Oh Lord (21 Grams)" and the epic "Heaven and Hell," but the star here is the titular guitar, which is as enjoyably unleashed as it's ever been on any Perry project.—GG

BUILT TO SPILL

There Is No Enemy Producer: Dave Trumfio
Warner Bros. Records
Release Date: Oct. 6

Three years after the release of its last album, "You in Reverse," Built to Spill returns with its seventh release, "There Is No Enemy," which finds the band exploring new influences outside of the familiar indie-rock territory while still indulging in the transcendent guitar solos it's become known for. On the country rock-flavored single "Hindsight," frontman Doug Martsch sings in a wistful tenor over a mix of languid and urgent guitar riffs, while "Life's a Dream" features an extended guitar solo against horns that provide a soulful demeanor. The haunting "Oh Yeah" opens with Martsch singing, "And if God does exist, I am sure he will forgive me for doubting," whereas the frantic-sounding "Pat" offers a dose of punk rock to the set. Martsch has hinted that "There Is No Enemy" could be the band's final album. If that's the case, the set's multifaceted melodies and experimentation would be an inspired sendoff.—KP

LATIN

Fuerza Natural
Producer: Héctor Castillo
Sony Music Latin
Release Date: Sept. 29

"I never felt so fine," Gustavo Cerati sings on the title track to his new album, "Fuerza Natural"—and then proves it with a set of intricately crafted and introspective folky melodies, psychedelic splashes and power pop. Cerati's storied past as frontman of the seminal Argentine pop-rock trio Soda Stereo hasn't overshadowed his solo career. On his first album after the group's successful 2007 reunion tour of Latin America and the United States, he echoes the sound of Soda and honors the Beatles ("He Visto a Lucy," "Naturaleza Muerta"), while moving forward with a pared-down acoustic sound incorporating subtle beats and celestial strings. From a sort of galactic country song ("Convoy") to a more typical driving guitar track ("Dominó") to a perfect rock ballad ("Cactus"), Cerati's musical sophistication reaches far beyond your average Latin pop fare. But his South American heart and soul come are revealed in the lyrical beauty of the hypnotic songs on this set.—JCN

CHRIS BROWN FEATURING LIL WAYNE AND SWIZZ BEATZ

I Can Transform Ya (3:50)
Producer: Swizz Beatz
Writers: various Publishers: various
Jive

On his first officially released track since his February altercation with ex-girlfriend Rihanna, Chris Brown takes a break from performing community service to brag about his riches. "Need a ride? I can Range you up/Money, I can change you up/What you need, you can have that/My black card—they don't decline that," Brown boasts on "I Can Transform Ya," the alleged first single from his upcoming "Graffiti" album. Littered with referee whistles and hand claps, Swizz Beatz' production is high-energy and appropriately robotic. Still, it's collaborator Lil Wayne who comes off the wittiest. "She's gonna transform like Optimus Prime . . . tell your man he better get his Voltron up," Wayne raps over electric guitar, giving a literal nod to the '80s cartoon-turned-blockbuster movie "Transformers." Whether Brown can transform public sentiment with his new output, however, remains to be seen.—MC

COUNTRY

JIMMY WAYNE

Sara Smile (3:40)
Producer: Dann Huff
Writers: D. Hall, J. Oates
Publisher: not listed
Valory Music

Anyone who has followed Jimmy Wayne's career knows the North Carolina native has a history with "Sara Smile." His resurrected version of this '70s Hall & Oates classic helped him land his first record deal and has been a favorite during his live shows and radio promo visits. Now the song is here for the masses, and it's gorgeous. Easily the most soulful of today's young country crooners, Wayne delivers an earthy, sensual performance. Song originators Daryl Hall and John Oates lend their background vocals, and producer Dann Huff remains true to the R&B-flavored essence of the original, while interjecting subtle fiddle and steel touches that make it a solid fit for country radio. "Sara Smile" has strong hit potential and is a great launch pad for Wayne's new album of the same title, due Nov. 24.—DEP

ROCK

SHINEDOWN

If You Only Knew (3:45)
Producer: Rob Cavallo
Writers: B. Smith, D. Bassett
Publishers: Driven by Music/EMI Blackwood Music (BMI), Two of Everything Music/Music of Windswept (ASCAP)
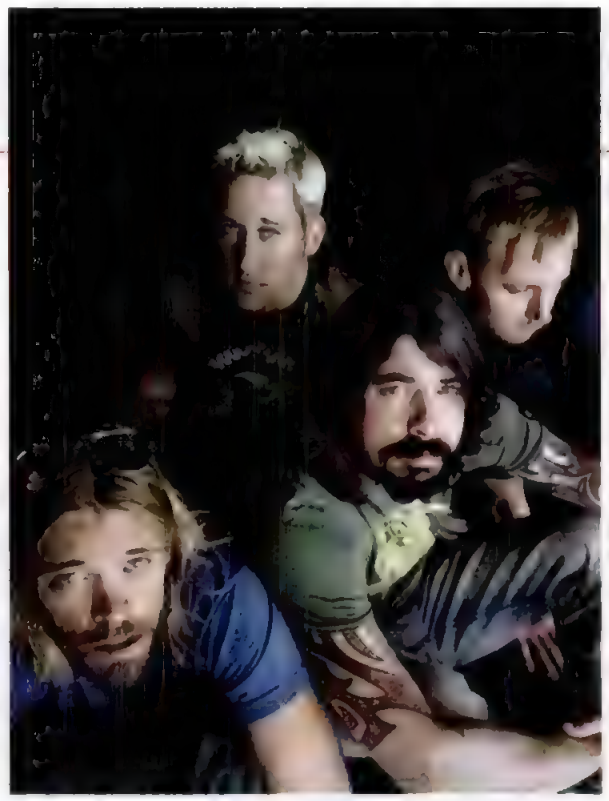
Atlantic



Shinedown follows up its biggest hit to date ("Second Chance") with another modern rock gem. "If You Only Knew" is the first love ballad that singer Brent Smith wrote for the band—the song was inspired by the day Smith found out he was going to be a father, and his powerful vocal exudes a sense of pure joy. He and songwriter Dave Bassett have crafted relatable, yet open-ended lyrics that are colored with affecting guitars and a stadium-ready sound, bringing to mind some memorable rock ballads by Bon Jovi, Aerosmith and Goo Goo Dolls. Centering on Smith's vocal, Grammy Award-winning producer Rob Cavallo (Green Day, Paramore) blends a lively drum kick with equally spirited guitars and emotional string instrumentation, making "If You Only Knew" a sure bet for success.—MM

BRITNEY SPEARS

3 (3:21)
Producers: Max Martin, Shellback
Writers: M. Martin, Shellback, T. Amber
Publishers: Maratone admin. by Kobalt/Universal Publishing (ASCAP/BMI)
Jive

At this point, the formula for a Britney Spears hit has been nailed a dozen times over. The proof will be in large supply on November's "Britney Spears Singles Collection," and "3"—the lone new song on this greatest-hits set—has all the right ingredients, too. The Max Martin- and Shellback-produced track opens with sputtering synths and builds to a climax of wildly pulsing bass that summons fans to the dancefloor. She teasingly sings about threesomes with her signature coy delivery, asking her partner if he's game for some "love in the extreme" while evoking numerology and references to Peter, Paul and Mary. The metaphor—and Spears' vocals—may be as thin as ever, but if the past decade is any evidence, "3" will be another notch in this pop provocateur's belt.—MH

FOO FIGHTERS

Wheels (4:38)
Producers: Butch Vig, Foo Fighters Writers: Foo Fighters
Publishers: various
Roswell/RCA

Dave Grohl quietly rails against all things monotonous on "Wheels," one of two previously unreleased tracks that appears on Foo Fighters' upcoming "Greatest Hits" album. The song has a Weezer-meets-the-Fray vibe, and it flies out of the gate with feedback-laden riffs, well-timed stutter stops and a gentle balance of electric and acoustic guitars. Four-chord loops nicely underscore Grohl's frustration as he mourns life's failure to meet his expectations. Foo Fighters' sly, ever-present self-awareness is still at play on "Wheels," though not quite as cleverly as it appears on the band's classics like "Everlong," "Times Like These" and "My Hero." Grohl sings during the opening verse, "I wanted something better, man/I wished for something new." For an act of this stature and talent, it's hard not to agree just a little.—BS

Brain Power

Breaking Benjamin's 'Dear Agony' Debuts At No. 4

"Dear Agony," the fourth full-length album from the Pennsylvania post-grunge band Breaking Benjamin, enters the Billboard 200 at No. 4 with 134,000 copies sold, according to Nielsen SoundScan. While the act's last two Hollywood Records albums have gone platinum, this is the group's best sales week—the result of savvy marketing and a commitment to change that starts with lead singer Benjamin Burnley.

Since forming in 1998, Breaking Benjamin's pummeling alt-rock has earned heavy airplay on modern rock radio. The singles "So Cold" and "Sooner or Later," from the 2004 set "We Are Not Alone," each peaked in the top 10 of Billboard's Alternative chart. Meanwhile, the 2006 disc "Phobia" debuted at No. 2 and led to a successful joint tour with Three Days Grace in the fall of 2007.

While the band—whose lineup includes guitarist Aaron Fink, bassist Mark Klepaski and drummer Chad Szeliga—was gaining a sizable following and sales momentum, Burnley was living as a "functional alcoholic" and had developed neurological problems.

"I've suffered permanent brain damage through alcoholism," says Burnley, who has been sober for more than two years. "I don't want to say that I'm proud to have stopped, but I'm glad I realized that I wanted to stick around for a while."

After he quit drinking and started writing material for "Dear Agony," Burnley decided to use his struggles with alcohol and subsequent recovery as recurring themes. The first album Burnley recorded sober with the band is also his most personally revealing and features a scan of the singer's brain on the album cover.

"All the tests and hospital visits stick with you, so I thought the scan was an effective image to use," he says. "It was a dangerous situation to be in . . . thankfully, I was able to reflect what was going on in my life within the music."

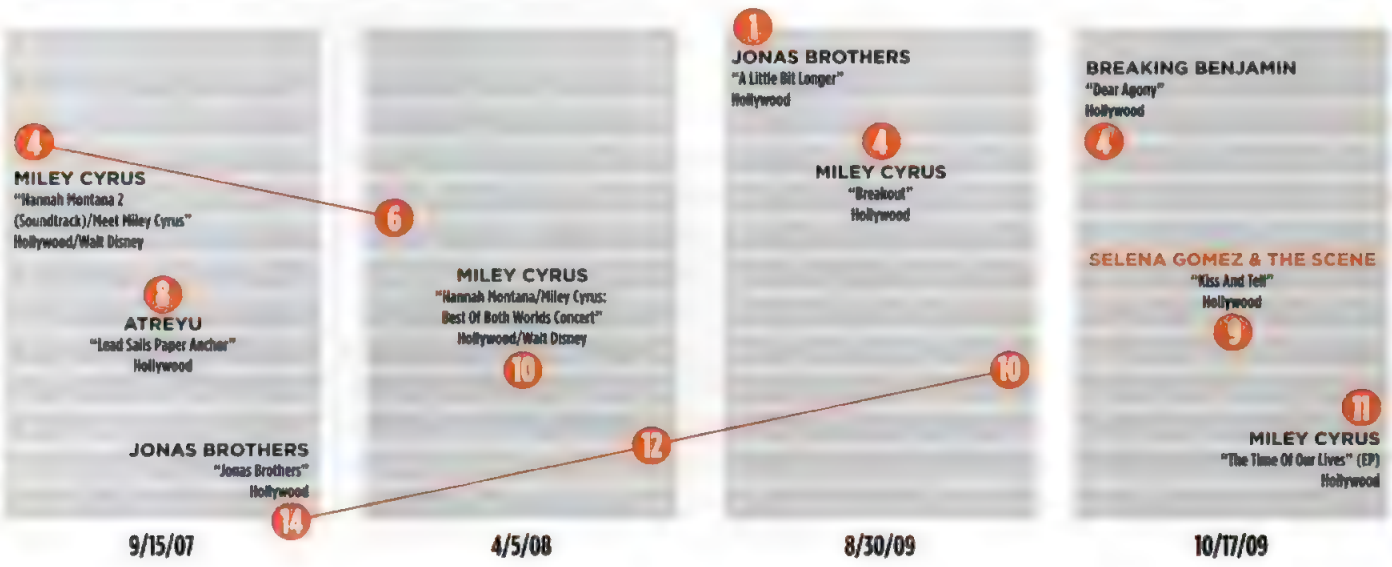
Produced by David Bendeth, "Agony" draws on Burnley's emotional experience to create an 11-song set of anthems with blistering lyrics. The lead single, "I Will Not Bow," is No. 40 on the Billboard Hot 100 and features stirring lines like "Take the path that leads to nowhere/All is lost again, but I'm not giving in" over chugging guitars and cymbal crashes.

Aside from its affecting content, the new album's success can also be chalked up to Breaking Benjamin's unique marketing strategy. "I Will Not Bow" has received exposure from its placement in the Touchstone release "Surrogates," while three tracks from "Agony" have been made available as downloadable songs for "Rock Band." A deluxe edition of the album is available exclusively at Best Buy. It comes packaged with a bonus DVD that includes all of the group's music videos.

Not giving in: BREAKING BENJAMIN

"We've tried to find a balance between traditional marketing tools and new media," says Hollywood director of marketing Linc Wheeler. "The industry might look at a follow-up record and see a falloff, but the band has been eager to embrace new ways of getting closer to fans, especially through new technology."

In September, the group released "Altered Benjamin," an online flash videogame that was designed and submitted by a fan. The parody of the arcade game "Altered Beast" features Burnley as a character and the other band members as bosses.



The game, along with the band's fan-run Web site, demonstrates the act's online interaction with its followers that Burnley believes helps keep the act grounded. "Musically, we're a serious band," he says. "So it's cool for stuff like the game to show that we have a sense of humor and are open to fan contributions."

Starting Nov. 29 in San Antonio, Breaking Benjamin will hit the road on a bill that includes Sick Puppies and Rev Theory. While Burnley says that pressure used to hamper him onstage, now he focuses only on having fun. "Nowadays, bands are a dime a dozen," he says. "At this point, I'm just very thankful we've lasted this long and can continue to perform."

HOORAY FOR HOLLYWOOD

With a pair of top 10 debuts on the Billboard 200 from Breaking Benjamin (No. 4, 134,000 copies sold) and Selena Gomez & the Scene (No. 9, 66,000) joining Miley Cyrus' "The Time of Our Lives" at No. 11, Hollywood Records owns three of the chart's top 15 for the fourth time in two years. ¶ Breaking Benjamin has its best sales week yet, as "Dear Agony" surpasses the rock band's previous best week, when its 2006 album "Phobia" launched with 125,000 sold. Gomez is the latest Disney Channel actor to transition from a starring role on the network ("Wizards of Waverly Place") to a position behind the microphone. ¶ Additionally, Breaking Benjamin and Gomez give the label a pair of concurrent top 10 debuts for the first time since Oct. 16, 2004, when Rascal Flatts' "Feels Like Today" (Lyric Street/Hollywood) came in at No. 1 followed by Hilary Duff's self-titled set at No. 2 (Hollywood).

Family ties: RICKY SKAGGS

BLUEGRASS BY KEN TUCKER

Father's Day

Ricky Skaggs Nets Fifth No. 1 With 'Songs My Dad Loved'

Who knew that 50-plus years after he began singing and playing music, Ricky Skaggs would be celebrating his fifth straight No. 1 debut on Billboard's Top Bluegrass Albums chart? Perhaps his father, Hobert Skaggs. After all, he's the inspiration behind 'Ricky Skaggs Solo: Songs My Dad Loved" (Skaggs Family Records/Fontana), which recently topped the bluegrass tally and is currently No. 4.

Skaggs' parents recognized his talent at an early age. "I'd been singing since I was 3," says the 14-time Grammy Award winner. "I knew the harmony parts; just knew them in my head. I would hear my mom singing with my dad and I would sing what she sang."

The Kentucky native received his first musical instrument at the age of 5. "My dad went to a pawnshop and bought a mandolin," Skaggs recalls. "It was in my bed when I woke up one Saturday morning. My first real touch of metal and wood together, strings and wood . . . That electrified me."

When Hobert returned from working out of town to find young Ricky making chord changes and singing along, he was so excited by his son's progress that he bought himself a new guitar. (He'd lent his old one to a family friend.) And the rest, as they say, is history. Ricky Skaggs was playing with Bill Monroe at the age of 6 and with Flatt & Scruggs on TV a year later.

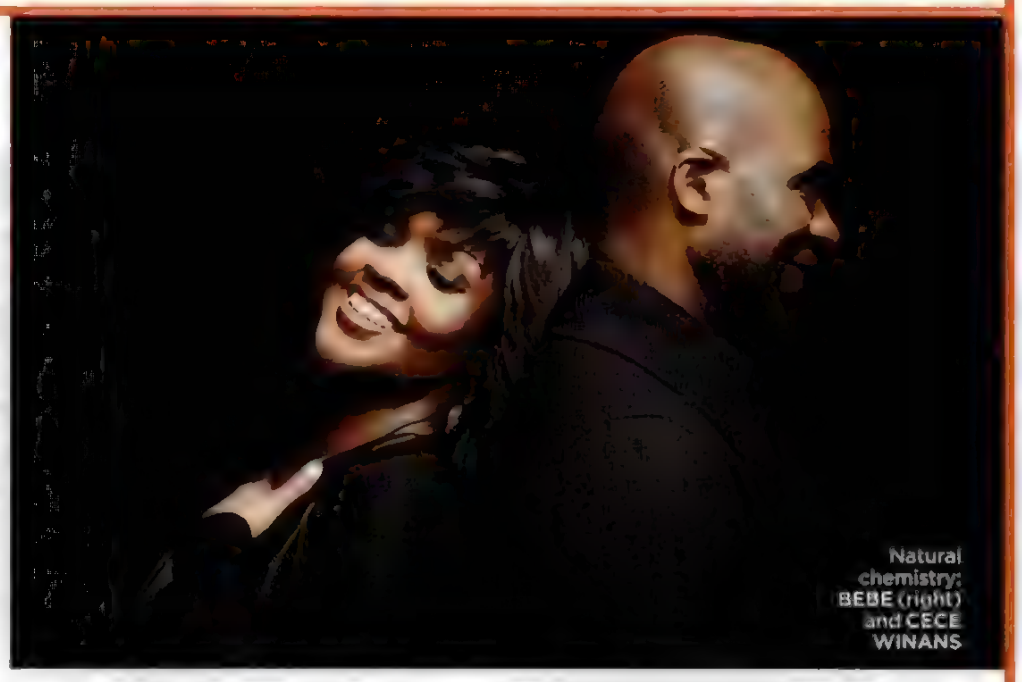
After honoring Monroe and other fathers of bluegrass in recent years with other albums, Skaggs decided it was time to pay tribute to his father, who died in 1996. When he started the recording process, "memories flooded my soul," Skaggs says. "These are songs we used to sing that my dad really loved."

The set includes versions of the Monroe Brothers' "What Is a Home Without Love" and "Sinner, You Better Get Ready" as well as songwriter Albert Brumley's "This World Is Not My Home." Roy Acuff's "Branded Wherever I Go," the hilarious "I Had but 50 Cents" and the classic hymn "God Holds the Future in His Hands" round out the album.

Skaggs plays every instrument (mandolin, banjo, fiddle, guitar, bass and piano, among others) and sings every note on the self-produced album. The arrangements are pleasantly simple—just as he and his father used to play them.

"My daddy introduced me to good music," Skaggs says. "Everything he liked had class and quality to it."

He adds that there also might be a sequel. "After I got the record cut, all these other songs came to mind," he says. "If there's a volume two, I'll have to bring my mom in [who died in 2001]. She was an equally important influence." ••••



WELCOME BACK

If the exuberant audience reaction to BeBe & CeCe Winans' recent live performance on Steve Harvey's syndicated radio morning show is any indication, the gospel duo still has the touch. And with the single "Close to You" notching its fourth week at No. 1 on Billboard's Hot Gospel Songs chart (also No. 11 on Adult R&B), the welcome mat is primed for the arrival of the pair's aptly titled new album, "Still."

Released Oct. 6, "Still" is BeBe & CeCe's first album in 15 years. It also doubles as the first project on the siblings' independent label, B&C Records, in association with Malaco Records. Signed to Capitol in the late '80s, BeBe & CeCe—members of Detroit's legendary gospel family the Winans—logged several gospel and R&B crossover hits ("Lost Without You," "Addictive Love," "I'll Take You There"), gold albums (including "Heaven") and a host of industry awards.

Opting to take a break, the pair pursued successful solo careers. By the time the idea of reuniting crossed their minds, 15 years had elapsed. But with the help of manager and album co-producer Ron Gillyard of Strategic Artists Management and Lionel Ridenour, head of Malaco Records' urban music division, the reunion became a reality.

"We didn't sit down and say, 'We're coming back in 15 years,' " BeBe says with a laugh. "This wasn't planned." CeCe adds, "By the time we finally got everything [the label and album] done, we realized how long it had been."

Natural chemistry: BEBE (right) and CECE WINANS

While the industry has changed radically since 1994, the duo's natural chemistry remains intact. Working with longtime producer Keith Thomas and others including Warryn Campbell, Percy Bady and Mario Winans, the intent was, in CeCe's words, "to be who we are but also current to gain new fans." Overall, the pair followed its tried-and-true formula: heartfelt spiritual songs about life that can stand the test of time. In fact, BeBe penned the soulful "Close" several years ago.

"When I put it away, I said then that if we did another album, this would be the first single," BeBe recalls. A second single, "Grace," is being promoted to gospel radio.

To further spread the word about "Still," BeBe & CeCe are traveling the radio, TV, online and print circuit, including "The Oprah Winfrey Show" (during which BeBe introduced "Oprah's Karaoke Challenge"), AOL Black Voices, the Associated Press and the "Yolanda Adams Morning Show." A national tour is being planned for 2010.

"Our intention has always been to record the best music we can," BeBe says. "After that, we sit back and watch what God does." —Gail Mitchell

HEAVEN SENT

Listen to Tercer Cielo's latest album, "Gente Común, Sueños Extraordinarios" ("Ordinary People, Extraordinary Dreams"), and it might take a minute to realize that one of Latin music's most promising acts is a Christian group. The album's pop/urban sound and broad messages have found appeal beyond Christian radio and retail—as well as a first-time home on Billboard's Top Latin Albums chart.

The Venemusic/Universal Latino release is No. 17 on the chart, while the single "Mi Último Día" is No. 23 on Latin Pop Airplay. With the exception of a few spins, the song's airplay has been limited to Puerto Rico.

Tercer Cielo has taken the independent route for years and has released five albums. "With Venemusic, however, we were able to get into places we weren't able reach before, like Wal-Mart and secular radio," songwriter/producer Juan Carlos Rodríguez says. He and his wife, Evelyn Herrera, make up Tercer Cielo.

"We thought for years that Christian music only played on Christian stations," he adds. "Now secular stations are playing our music even more than Christian ones."

The act's latest album is the third one by Tercer Cielo's lineup. Prior to Herrera joining, one of the act's cofounders left to pursue a solo career. Since then, Tercer Cielo's sound has evolved from adult-leaning ballads to a more youthful style. Despite the duo's religious inspiration, there are universal themes in its music.

"The same Bible that we Christians use as a guide talks about many things like love, family and money," Rodríguez says. "We find all sorts of subjects to sing about."

A case in point is "Mi Último Día." A bright, catchy midtempo song with soaring strings, guitar and piano, the track was inspired by the birth of the couple's daughter earlier this year. Rodríguez says, "It's about taking advantage of the time we have with family and friends and living each day as if it's your last."

Tercer Cielo will spend the remainder of 2009 on tour. Its trek includes two dates each in Puerto Rico and Florida plus stops throughout Latin America. —Ayala Ben-Yehuda

E-POPPING!

The arrival of Paramore's "and New Eyes" at No. 2 on Billboard 200 with ,000 sold gives the act its t sales week and highest- rting album. It also bows o. 1 on Top Digital ums with a whopping 000 downloads—41.5% of verall first week.

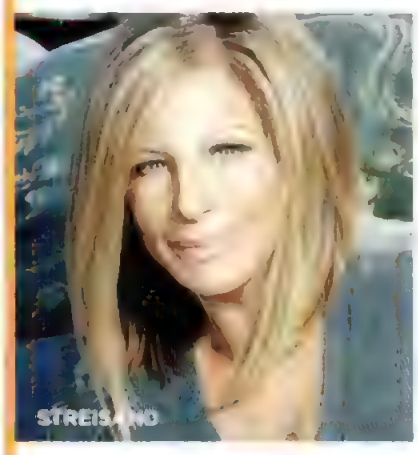
ROCK OF AGES

ynyrd Skynyrd returns to Billboard 200 after a six- absence with the studio "God & Guns" bowing at 18. It's the veteran band's hest-charting studio album e 1977's "Street Survivors" 51.

FREE FOR THRIFT

Miranda Lambert is the third t in the Nielsen SoundScan (1991-present) to bow at 1 on Top Country Albums her first three chart ies, as "Revolution" starts 66,000 copies. The other e-peaters? LeAnn Rimes Gretchen Wilson.

CHART BEAT



In the Aug. 29 Billboard Hot the Black Eyed Peas broke nark for most consecutive ks at No. 1, and Jason Mraz's Yours" likewise rewrote the rd for most weeks spent on chart. All good things come to nd, however. This week, the s cede the summit after 26 ght frames (see Between the ets, page 42), and Mraz's lformat smash departs after reeks.

Foreigner is back on familiar ind. The venerable band rns to Adult Contemporary r a 14-year absence, as hen It Comes to Love" bows o. 28. With a debut at No. 29 he Billboard 200, "Can't Down" generates the up's highest rank on the list e 1988.

Streisand Leads A Record Eight Debuts In Top 10

Barbra Streisand triumphs with her ninth No. 1 on the Billboard 200 as "Love Is the Answer" debuts atop the chart with 180,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. The achievement extends her lead as the female artist with the most No. 1s in the history of the chart.

The opening sum is also her best sales week and highest-charting album since 1997, when "Higher Ground" started at No. 1 with 207,000 sold. All told, the debut sum of "Love Is the Answer" is the artist's second-biggest opening week since SoundScan began tracking data in 1991.

"Answer" beats the arrivals of Paramore's "Brand New Eyes" at No. 2 (with a career-high 175,000 sold) and Mariah Carey's "Memoirs of an Imperfect Angel" at No. 3 (with 168,000). They join Breaking Benjamin's "Dear Agony" (No. 4, 134,000) and Alice in Chains' "Black Gives Way to Blue" (No. 5, 126,000) in an all-debut top five. It's the first time five current albums have each sold at least 100,000 copies in a week since Christmas week of 2008.

And those titles are just five of the record-breaking eight entries in the top 10. Until now, seven top 10 debuts were the most the chart had seen. It most recently happened on the June 6 Billboard 200, when Eminem's "Relapse" led the debut party at No. 1. How much would you bet that we'll have an entire top 10 full of debuts before the year is over?

STREISAND SUPERSTAR: Barbra Streisand is the only artist to collect No. 1 albums in each of the past five decades. Her first came in 1964 with "People," then she returned to No. 1 three times in the '70s with the 1974 "The Way We Were," the 1976 soundtrack to "A Star Is Born" and the 1978 "Greatest Hits, Volume 2." In the '80s, she notched No. 1s with the 1980 "Guilty" and the 1985 "Broadway Album." Finally, in the '90s, she claimed a pair of chart-toppers with the 1993 "Back to Broadway" and the 1997 "Higher Ground."

"Answer" was produced by Diana Krall and features Streisand accompanied by Krall's jazz quartet on classics like "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" and "In the Wee Small Hours." The album's handsome opening-week sales sum was powered by a half-hour sitdown on "The Oprah Winfrey Show" Sept. 24 and interviews on CBS' "Sunday Morning" Sept. 27 and NBC's "Today" on the album's release date, Sept. 29. The set was also stocked in Starbucks stores and sold through QVC and Streisand's official Web site.

Many industry prognosticators—myself included—focused on what was thought to be a battle for No. 1 between Paramore and Mariah Carey. Those who look into their crystal balls to project first-week sales figures had estimated that Paramore would finish ahead of the two divas. As it turns out, Streisand surprised many with how well her album sold in nontraditional ways—Starbucks, QVC and her Web site—and that threw a wrench into forecasting sales.

I thought Streisand was going to debut strongly, although No. 1 seemed somewhat unlikely. When I heard about "Love Is the Answer" and how it was being introduced into the marketplace, I knew this was going to be an event album. I suspect sales will remain strong as the holidays approach.

DIVA DISCUSSION: Mariah Carey's "Memoirs of an Imperfect Angel" begins its Billboard 200 life with 168,000 sold—a drop from the 463,000 opening of her last set, 2008's "E=MC2." The latter album bowed at No. 1 with her biggest first week ever.

The stunning opener of "E=MC2" was powered by the singer's release-week stop on "The Oprah Winfrey Show" and two nights on "American Idol." Additionally, the album's lead single, "Touch My Body," was an across-the-board radio smash. It peaked at No. 2 on the all-format Hot 100 Airplay chart, reaching a one-week high of 125 million in audience impressions.

"Memoirs" didn't have release-week visits to "Oprah" and "Idol" to help it, though Carey did perform on the Sept. 18 edition of "Oprah." And its first single, "Obsessed," isn't a runaway radio hit like "Touch My Body." "Obsessed" has so far peaked at No. 6 on the Hot 100 Airplay tally, with a one-week high of 84.7 million in audience. ....

This 134,000-copy start is the band's best sales week yet. The album is the act's first release since 2006's "Phobia" debuted and peaked at No. 2 with 125,000 sold.

The band visits the top 10 for the first time in 13 years as its first album with new vocalist William DuVall bows with 126,000. "Unplugged" was its last top 10 appearance, when it spent two weeks in the upper tier in August 1996.

With 45,000 sold, the animated metal band from the Adult Swim TV show surpasses the peak position and best sales week of its first set, "The Dethalbum," which hit No. 21 in 2007 with a high of 34,000 copies.

This film, due Oct. 16 stateside, sees its soundtrack from Karen O and pals begin with 16,000 sold. The set also starts at No. 3 on the Top Soundtracks chart.

The first 2009 Christmas album to chart on the Billboard 200 (6,000 sold) also debuts at No. 1 on Top Holiday Albums, viewable at billboard.biz/charts.

This Portland, Ore., radio station's charity compilation (5,000 sold), available at Starbucks, benefits SMART (Start Making a Reader Today) and features artists like Mat Kearney and Adele (pictured).

105

As I Lay Dying's Tim Lambesis is partly behind this project, a sort of parody tribute to Austrian Arnold Schwarzenegger. The album, which bows at No. 1 on Heatseekers Albums, includes tunes like "I Need Your Clothes, Your Boots and Your Motorcycle."

113

167

The singer/songwriter notches his highest-charting solo album since 1978's "Easter Island" peaked at No. 86. He supported the new set by stopping by ABC's "Good Morning America" Sept. 27.

191

Not only is he featured on the album at No. 113, he reaches a Billboard album chart on his own for the first time, as his third set sells nearly 3,000 copies. Of that figure, 64% were digital downloads.

Madonna's double-DVD music video retrospective "Celebration" debuts at No. 1 on Top Music Video Sales, marking the Queen of Pop's eighth chart-topper on the list. All told, each one of her 15 chart entries has reached the top five. This is her fourth consecutive No. 1 following 2001's "Drowned World Tour," 2006's "I'm Going to Tell You a Secret" and 2007's "The Confessions Tour."

This all-star collaborations album is the violinist's sixth set to reach Heatseekers and his first No. 1 on Top Classical Crossover Albums.

The parody hair band (formerly known as Metal Skool), famous for its L.A. club shows during which it drags celebrities onstage to sing, sees its major-label debut start with nearly 5,000 copies sold.

While Sandoval has charted before—in 2001 with "Bavarian Fruit Bread" (No. 39)—she was also the singer for Mazzy Star.

PROGRESS REPORT

Anya Marina, "Satellite Heart"

The track enters Heatseekers Songs at No. 22, thanks to its healthy first-week download total of 15,000 copies sold. The tune's big number is due to the song being the instant download track that accompanied the pre-order of the "New Moon" soundtrack.

UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC

The track is the first Hot 100 No. 1 for Universal Republic, which became an entity in 2005 when it and Universal Motown splintered from Universal Motown Records Group.

The song winds up with 14 weeks at No. 1, which ties it with this decade's longest stay at the top with Mariah Carey's "We Belong Together."

28 & 51

At No. 28, the troupe's cover of Queen's No. 13-peaking 1977 classic bests the legendary group's own remake with George Michael (No. 30 in 1993). At No. 51, "Alone" returns to the chart for the first time since Heart's original version reached No. 1 in 1987.

73

The band fetches its 13th top five on Alternative (viewable at billboard.biz) as this track zooms 18-5. The act enters a tie with Linkin Park for third-most top fives on that list behind Green Day (17) and U2 (16).

98

This act returns to the Hot 100 for the first time since 2004 with its current top 20 Adult Top 40 track (No. 19). The band's [illegible]-city tour this month in support of its new album, "Save Me, San Francisco," due Oct. 27.

SEAN ENDS PEAS RECORD REIGN

Jay Sean takes his debut single to No. 1 on the Billboard Hot 100 as "Down" darts 2-1 to end the Black Eyed Peas' record No. 1 run at 26 consecutive weeks (14 weeks for "I Gotta Feeling" and 12 for "Boom Boom Pow"). "Down" concurrently moves to No. 1 on Hot 100 Airplay with 115 million listener impressions, while climbing 5-3 on Hot Digital Songs, where its total download tally to date now surpasses 1.5 million. Sean is the first male artist to take his debut single to No. 1 on the Hot 100 since Flo Rida rode "Low" to the top in January 2008. —Silvio Pietroluongo

After being honored as Billboard's Rising Star and Woman of the Year, respectively, Oct. 2, Lady Gaga and Beyonce each make milestone moves on Mainstream Top 40.

Lady Gaga's "Paparazzi" pushes 11-7 to become her fourth top 10 on the chart. She is just the fifth female in the tally's history to collect at least four top 10s from a debut domestic album, joining Alanis Morissette (five, 1995-96), Christina Aguilera (1999-2000), Gwen Stefani (2005) and Fergie (five, 2006-08).

Beyoncé concurrently prepares her fifth top 10 on Mainstream Top 40, as "Sweet Dreams" rises 15-10. The ascent makes "I Am . . . Sasha Fierce" her first album to yield four top 10s on the chart. "If I Were a Boy" reached No. 9, "Single Ladies (Put a Ring on It)" spent three weeks at No. 1, and "Halo" hovered for three weeks at a peak of No. 2.

Underwood's 10th top 10 is the most by any solo female in the current decade. Faith Hill and Martina McBride are tied for second place with nine top 10s apiece in the 2000s.

Chesney scores his 28th top 10 this decade, widening his lead as the artist with the most trips to that level in the '00s. The top 10 hasn't seen a core country artist with a non-country duet partner since Chesney's "Everybody Wants to Go to Heaven" with the Wailers reached No. 1 a year ago.

BETWEEN THE BULLETS

'MOUNTAIN' HIGH

Traditional country/bluegrass artist Patty Loveless achieves her first No. 1 start on Top Bluegrass Albums, as "Mountain Soul II" debuts with more than 6,000 copies sold. Her third entry on the Bluegrass list follows a No. 2 start with "Bluegrass & White Snow: A Mountain Christmas" in December 2002 and a No. 6 debut with "Mountain Soul" in July 2002. The new set starts at No. 19 on Top Country Albums, where her most recent prior appearance was a No. 13 bow with "Sleepless Nights" in September 2008. High atop the country chart, Miranda Lambert debuts with her third album, "Revolution" (see Hot Box, page 37). —Wade Jessen

CAREY CLAIMS FIFTH NO. 1

Mariah Carey coasts into second place for the most No. 1s by a female on Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums in the Nielsen SoundScan era as "Memoirs of an Imperfect Angel" leaps 79-1. In its first week following street-date violations, "Memoirs" becomes Carey's fifth chart-topper and lifts her past Alicia Keys and Janet Jackson, each of whom have four. Mary J. Blige is in first place with seven. "Memoirs" is Carey's third consecutive studio set to reach the summit, a first for the singer.

At No. 6, Ghostface Killah lands his first top 10 in his last three attempts with "Ghostdini: Wizard of Poetry in Emerald City." It's his eighth top 10 overall and first since 2007's "The Big Doe Rehab." The Pacesetter honor goes to "Silk Soul Music . . . An All-Star Tribute to Maze Featuring Frankie Beverly" (67-14). The set was available in August at select retailers before its wider Sept. 29 release.

Jay-Z's fourth No. 1 on Rhythmic Airplay is the first leader in six years. Guest artist Rihanna and Kanye West land their second and fifth chart toppers respectively.

9

With the song's climb on this chart and on Mainstream R&B/Hip-Hop (38-10), Drake (pictured) ties Keri Hilson for both charts' most top 10s by a new artist this year, with three.

19

Wilson claims consecutive top 20 hits for the first time as a lead artist. His previous track, "There Goes My Baby," peaked at No. 15 in April.

91

99

Under the Dirty Money moniker for his next album, Diddy trends a trio with Dawn Richard of Danity Kane and singer-songwriter Kalenna Harper. The group's album, "Last Train to Paris," will be Bad Boy's first release for Interscope.

USHER DELIVERS THE 'PAPERS'

Usher introduces his next album with the lead single "Papers," which enters Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs at No. 60. The song bows with 3.9 million impressions after being delivered to radio two days before the tracking period ended at midnight Oct. 6. While this is a decent debut, the track should enjoy a substantial leap next issue with a full week under its belt. Last issue, Chris Brown's "I Can Transform Ya" debuted at No. 92 with one day of airplay following its digital distribution to radio. It rockets this week to No. 26 for the largest chart move in more than three years and the second-best audience increase (9.1 million) of 2009. —Raphael George

Joan Sebastian scores his third No. 1 on Regional Mexican Airplay with his 26th chart entry as "Te Ira Mejor Sin Mi" steps 2-1 (9.8 million in audience, up 2%). His prior chart-toppers were the 2006 "Mas Alla Del Sol," which spent 10 weeks at the summit, and the 2000 "Secreto De Amor" (two weeks).

Grupo Montez de Durango scores its 12th top five hit on Top Regional Mexican Albums as "El Borracho" jumps 6-3 (2,000 copies, up 25%). Since the Oct. 18, 2003, issue when its first album, "De Durango A Chicago," debuted atop the chart, only Los Tigres del Norte have notched more top fives (17).

THE AVENTURA CONTINUES

The Bronx bachata act continues to heat up the charts as "Su Veneno" jumps 2-1 on Tropical Airplay to become its sixth No. 1 on the chart (2.8 million in audience, up 50%). The group is now tied with Juan Luis Guerra & 440 for the second-most No. 1s by an act in the chart's history; Wisin & Yandel are first with seven. On Latin Rhythm Airplay, "Su Veneno" rises 6-2 (2.8 million, up 21%) to become the group's ninth top five title, matching its entire output of charting singles. —Rauly Ramirez

MOBY TAKES STAND AGAINST CALIF. DOMESTIC VIOLENCE BUDGET CUTS

Electronic artist Moby understands better than most the importance of domestic violence shelters for women in need, having grown up with a mother who was involved in several abusive relationships.

At the age of 8, "I had to stop her from being stabbed to death by a boyfriend of hers," Moby recalls. "I hate to say this, but almost half of the women I know who are friends of mine have been in abusive relationships of some sort or another."

So after reading a recent New York Times article about California domestic violence shelters closing as a result of statewide budget cuts, Moby decided to use his current tour as a platform to spread awareness. The artist will donate the revenue from his mid-October California concerts to the California Partnership to End Domestic Violence, which will distribute funds to shelters and communities most affected by the budget cuts.

The tour stops include the House of Blues in San Diego (Oct. 12), the Wiltern in Los Angeles (Oct. 14) and the Warfield Theatre in San Francisco (Oct. 15). Moby also plans to host a press conference in San Francisco with state senators and members of CPEDV to raise additional awareness.

"I'll be giving around $85,000, which is a decent amount of money, but not really enough to make a dent in the $20 million that has been cut," he says. "So at all the shows there will be the ability for people to donate directly. I'm also hoping that by talking about it, more people will go online to donate money and help repeal this legislation."

Moby hopes funding for the shelters will be reinstated, and he plans to support the cause until that happens. "There are a lot of worthy causes," he says, "but closing shelters really does become a death sentence for a lot of people."

The artist is touring in support of his latest album, "Wait for Me," which was released June 30 on Mute. —Mitchell Peters

Billboard's annual Women in Music event, presented by Macy's and in association with International Creative Management, took place Oct. 2 at New York's Pierre Hotel. Billboard honored the top 30 female executives in the music business, celebrating the success of these industry leaders during the past year, as well as their overall career achievements. Lady Gaga—who had two No. 1 singles on the Billboard Hot 100 from her debut album—received Billboard's Rising Star honor and sat down for an onstage Q&A with "Today" host Hoda Kotb. Beyoncé was named Billboard's Woman of the Year, having had a No. 1 album—her seventh in a row—and a No. 1 movie in the past 12 months. Beyoncé was interviewed onstage by "The Oprah Winfrey Show" correspondent Gayle King, and the event closed with a special performance of Beyoncé's "Halo" and "Single Ladies (Put a Ring on It)" performed by Staten Island grade schoolers, the PS 22 Chorus. Event sponsors also included the USO, ASCAP and Skin Benefits. PHOTOS: COURTESY OF ARNOLD TURNER/A. TURNER ARCHIVES

ADJAM

The House of Blues Sunset Strip was packed with more than 900 concertgoers for thinkLA's AdJam, presented by Digital Broadcasting Group. The ninth annual event is a battle of the bands between Los Angeles-area advertising agencies. Veterans of the media, marketing, advertising and entertainment industries left work early to see who would capture the winner's trophy, the AdJam Axe. A panel of music industry veterans selected the top four bands and the crowd crowned the winner. Agencies participating included TBWA\Chiat\Day (the winner in 2008), Moxie Interactive, MediaVest, Avatar Labs, BLITZ, David & Goliath and the Phelps Group. The event was sponsored by DBG, Metacafe, SNAP eMobile, Billboard.com, Ecast, Pandora, Turn, Giant Realm, Time Axcess and Vibrant Media. PHOTOS: COURTESY OF JEMCI

INSIDE TRACK

GIRLS BACK IN ACTION

Brazilian Girls, the New York-based art-rock-party band whose last album was nominated for a Grammy Award, went on an extended hiatus last year when lead singer Sabina Sciubba decamped to Paris for the birth of her first child. The band then had its early-October return to action sidelined by a snag in immigration red tape. Sciubba, a German national living in France, had problems obtaining her visa to return to the United States, and the band was forced to cancel two shows, including an Oct. 2 appearance on Governor's Island, just off the tip of Manhattan.

Fortunately, Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand, D-N.Y., helped by expediting the visa process. "Musicians from overseas who perform in New York add tremendous value to the city's vibrant cultural and tourist economy," Gillibrand says. "I am thrilled that these shows will go on and the U.S. tour can proceed on schedule."

The Girls will play Oct. 17 at San Francisco's Treasure Island Music Festival and Oct. 19 at Avalon in Los Angeles before returning to New York to begin recording their fourth album, tentatively titled "The Great Big Unknown." The band hopes to release the album on a yet-to-be-determined label next year.

Sciubba has also been writing songs on her own, some of which she'll debut at a solo performance Oct. 26 at New York's Joe's Pub. "I wrote these in the last 12 months," she says. "A style I baptized EuroNova . . . I will sing and play them on my baby guitar."

Rock Of Ages?

How Small Ambitions And Short-Term Thinking Are Hurting Pop Music

BY ROBERT HILBURN

I was surprised by a friend's reaction when I told him about one of the key points in my new memoir, "Corn Flakes With John Lennon: And Other Tales From a Rock-'n'Roll Life": The glory days of rock'n'roll are rapidly fading. He looked at me, paused and said, "It sounds like you've written the epitaph for rock'n'roll."

I hope not.

The more I think about the current state of popular music, however, the more I think of the book as, if not an epitaph, then at least a final warning.

For all the focus on technology and new ways of reaching consumers, the overriding challenge facing the record industry is the need for more visionary artists—the kind who once won the allegiance of fans by giving them comfort and inspiration that they couldn't consistently find in other parts of pop culture.

At its most powerful, rock'n'roll was never just about a sound, but about an article of faith—the bold idea that we could change the world. That's why many of the genre's most enduring anthems addressed that theme, from "Blowin' in the Wind" to "Lose Yourself."

The influence of top-tier acts, from the Beatles to U2, went well beyond the millions of records they sold. They created and then nurtured the idea that rock'n'roll mattered in our lives and in turn fostered such a large appetite for rock around the world that hundreds of other musicians could march under that banner.

Rock bands continue to make music. Record companies still turn out albums. And music fans love their iPods. But something essential is missing. Music is no longer a vital part of most young people's lives—and everyone must share the blame.

Young musicians must take some blame for rock's decline as a social force because most of them no longer aim to make recordings that will reach a mass audience. Ever since the death of Kurt Cobain, artists have been increasingly contemptuous of major record labels, and even too much success. They've witnessed a pattern of compromise, greed and self-destruction on episodes of "Behind the Music."

We've seen many of the most promising new acts, from Arcade Fire to Radiohead, choose to operate outside the major-label structure rather than risk being chewed up by the system or enter the uncertain world of 360 deals.

Major labels have some blame for the industry's woes because they were so slow to respond to challenges posed by the Internet. More than ever, label executives are slaves to their short-term bottom lines in a way that makes it almost impossible to provide the kind of long-range career development that helped most landmark acts.

"If the new Bruce Springsteen walked into this office tomorrow, I wouldn't know how to break him in this Internet, 'American Idol' era," one top record label president told me last December when I was writing the book. There's only room for about four acts to break in a year, he said, and three of them are going to be from "American Idol."

Ultimately, though, the biggest reason for the industry's crisis is that so much of today's young pop audience no longer feels allegiance to the music. The rock'n'roll bond has been broken. To most pop music fans, records are no longer the cornerstones of their lives. They don't feel the need for rock'n'roll to provide their heroes or their social network. They can turn to Facebook, Twitter, even videogames.

"I'm not a negative person, but I'm very realistic and it doesn't look good right now," said Jack White when I interviewed him for the book late last year. "I would pick this as the absolute worst time to connect with people through music. Today's generation takes a lot for granted when it comes to music. It's like, 'I'm going to play videogames and when I come back to rock'n'roll it's going to be there waiting for me.' They don't buy the CD, but they'll download it and give it to friends."

So where do we go from here?

If rock has any chance of reclaiming its position of power, great young bands need to regain the confidence and ambition to reach a wide audience with purposeful music—and hope it's not too late to recapture their mass audience.

If major labels are going to have any chance of being part of this renaissance, they have to devise new guidelines and practices that enable them to reclaim the trust of musicians. First, they have to hire A&R people who can find young, visionary artists. They need to nurture those artists throughout two or three albums rather than demand immediate sales results. Finally, the major companies have to be willing to design record contracts that make artists feel like partners rather than ones that place artists in virtual servitude.

That will require realizing that this shift will pay off. Legendary artists like Bob Dylan, Stevie Wonder and Neil Young didn't just make albums that affected society. They sold millions of records. It's easy to think of Dylan and Young as cult artists but they have sold millions of albums for the past few decades. More important, their music won the allegiance of generations of young people, who in turn felt so strongly about music that they bought millions of albums by other artists.

How many record company presidents today can point to even one artist on their label who has the bold imagination to bring together a generation of fans?

The answer, I'm afraid, shows how desperate things are. ····

FOR THE RECORD

- A story in the Oct. 3 issue misspelled the last name of Mo Ostin, former head of Warner Bros. Records.
- Marilyn Bergman co-wrote the song "Trust Me," which appears in the Steven Soderbergh film "The Informant!" A story in the Oct. 10 issue misstated the movie's title.
- Keith Urban's mobile marketing campaign for his Escape To-gether tour drew the participation of more than 300,000 fans but didn't include free track give-aways. A story in the Oct. 10 issue was incorrect on these points.
- Flyleaf's album "Memento Mori" is scheduled to be released Nov. 10. A story in the Oct. 17 issue misstated the release date.

Major Labels Exert Greater Control Over Monetizing Music Videos

In just five short years, music videos have gone from a marketing and promotional expense for record labels to the linchpin of their strategy to profit from online advertising.

So far, at least, such efforts have been hampered by low advertising rates (measured by the cost per thousand impressions, or CPM), which according to industry sources generated less than 1% of the labels' total digital revenue last year.

In a bid to reverse these fortunes, major labels like Universal Music Group, Sony Music Entertainment and Warner Music Group are taking control of the distribution and monetization of their content. Rather than simply license videos to aggregators like YouTube and AOL and let them pitch to advertisers, the labels are embracing a syndication strategy under which they supply the videos and sell advertising around that content.

Universal and Sony are doing so in their Vevo joint venture with YouTube, through which they hope to establish a destination site for all music videos. Warner is establishing branded channels within YouTube and other video aggregators in an effort to drive more traffic to and monetize its artists' Web sites, and it recently partnered with Outrigger Media to sell these opportunities to brands and ad agencies. They hope to more than double the CPMs gained through the old model, with the aim of raising their current single-digit CPMs to the estimated $30-$40 CPM rate charged by the online video portal Hulu.

"This model flips the economics so we take a bigger share of the total revenue generated," says Michael Nash, Warner executive VP of digital strategy and business development. "It's win-win for us. More money is generated and we take a larger percentage of it."

To do so, the labels will have to do more than sell a few banner or pre-roll video ads. Instead, they'll need to offer advertisers deeper opportunities to integrate their brand with artists and their content. An example of how this may play out is the way Atlantic Records filmed some behind-the-scenes footage of Cobra Starship at the MTV Music Video Awards using the new Nokia Twist phone as part of a multitiered digital marketing campaign by Nokia that's still unfolding. Future examples could include product placement in music videos and sponsor skins of artists' Web sites.

Warner's partner Outrigger Media has studied Warner's structure, label organization and artist roster so it can pitch clients on these kinds of opportunities, according to Outrigger CEO Mike Henry.

"Whether or not a marketer has a music strategy," Henry says, "we can really efficiently go after the group of artists that attract the highest concentration of their target audience, which in media is the name of the game."

Vevo, meanwhile, is building an ad sales and support team in-house with about 30-40 employees. They'll be charged with creating integrated marketing programs, branded content opportunities and metrics reporting for advertisers and brands partnering with the service. In September, Vevo hired Nokia mobile ad sales head David Kohl as executive VP of sales and customer operations.

Sources close to the Vevo venture say the team will consist primarily of veteran ad executives with existing client and agency relationships and include former employees of Yahoo, MSN, MTV, NBC Universal, MySpace, AOL and other major online portals. Kohl, for example, previously led MTV Networks' online and TV ad programs before joining Nokia.

This strategic shift comes at a time when online video is hitting its stride. Total online video streams and time spent per viewer both surged 25% in the United States during September from a year earlier, spurred by a 12% increase in unique viewers in the same period, according to Nielsen Online.

Although Nielsen doesn't break out music video views in its report, data compiled by the tracking firm TubeMogul suggests that music videos remain among the most valuable online video assets. In a recent examination of all-time views for videos that have landed in YouTube's top 25 most-viewed clips, TubeMogul found that the four major labels and Disney's Hollywood Records accounted for 76.5% of all views.

This new approach by the majors has won praise from industry analysts like Gartner's Mike McGuire, who says the labels need to get more skin in the game if they're to benefit from new digital revenue streams. Now, he says, it's about execution.

"You can only whiteboard it and spreadsheet it so many times," McGuire says. "At some point, you have to get something out into the field to see what happens. And that's what you're seeing right now." ••••

The music-focused blog network MOG expects to add a music streaming, download and Internet radio service to its site by Thanksgiving. Dubbed MOG All Access, the music service will be Web-based and cost $5 per month for unlimited music streaming and five free downloads per month.

Regional Mexican Music Summit Addresses Cost Pressures, Promotion Vehicles

How does one promote and develop talent at a time when no one wants to pay for anything? The struggle among artists, labels, radio stations and tour promoters over their share of a shrinking pool of money was a consistent theme at this year's Billboard Regional Mexican Music Summit.

The fourth annual conference—held Oct. 8-9 at the Hyatt Regency Century Plaza in Los Angeles—featured a lot of hand-wringing over a depressed economy and the failure of various sectors of Latin music's highest-selling genre to adjust.

Artist Lupillo Rivera, whose family has spawned a dynasty of recording stars, said during a panel that artists should no longer be expected to perform for free at radio festivals. After the conference, radio programming consultant Jose Santos countered that radio still drives music sales and that free shows play an essential role in exposing new and midlevel artists. Established acts can "start cherry-picking festivals based on where [they] need the most exposure," Santos told Billboard.

But radio stations are facing their own problems, such as covering the costs of producing festivals in the first place. During the conference's touring panel, Santos spoke up from the audience, saying, "I had to cancel three events in September because we saw the artists are charging a lot when they're just starting out. The labels don't have money either . . . there weren't sponsorships, the cities are asking more money to rent parks . . . We've sought trades with hotels and flights, but the money isn't there."

Asked during the touring panel what his biggest mistake was during the prior year, promoter John Frias responded that it was paying as much for talent this year as last. "If we bought cheaper, we could reduce our costs," Frias said. "Groups have to understand that."

Amid the doom and gloom, there were signs that the industry is adapting. Fonovisa/Disa president Gustavo Lopez pointed to the opportunities the labels are bringing to artists like Espinoza Paz, a breakout singer/songwriter who placed a song on Universal pop star David Bisbal's album.

Live Nation is looking to work with newer regional Mexican acts at the club level, VP of ethnic programming/touring Manuel Moran told those in attendance at the touring panel. And Spanish Broadcasting System is selling overnight infomercial spots to artists and labels that consist of a full-length track coupled with an introduction identifying the song's sponsor. "We will sell infomercials to multinationals and indies," said SBS director of new business development Manny Mora on the talent development panel. "This will give programmers a chance to see what's working and what gives them ratings."

What was clear at the conference was that while radio airplay remains crucial, online promotion has filled an important void in terms of exposing new talent. "Before, [regional Mexican acts] would go on promotion [tours] from little town to little town and then they would go to the big cities—now, they do this through the Internet," said Tomás Rubio, programming VP/executive producer of the new satellite channel A Toda Musica TV, during the "It's All About Image" panel.

Other channels represented on the panel, Bandamax and TeleRitmo, have shows that reward new acts that win audience votes with such prizes as production of a new music video that they'll put into rotation.

That was music to the ears of the many people in attendance who were relatively new to the business. Jenni Rivera summed up their views by citing a recent radio festival she attended that had many well-known acts but didn't draw many people.

"People are tired of hearing the same thing over and over," she said. "They want something original and different." ...

Jimmy Iovine, Dr. Dre Partner With PC Maker HP

If Interscope Geffen A&M chairman Jimmy Iovine and Dr. Dre are to succeed in developing products with improved digital sound, they won't be able to do it alone.

That could make their new partnership with computer maker Hewlett-Packard an important step forward. Iovine, Dre and HP executives recently unveiled a new HP notebook PC called the Envy 15 Beats, which includes software and hardware tweaks that HP claims offers dramatically better sound quality from digital music.

The computer was developed in conjunction with Beats Electronics, a company Iovine and Dre co-founded in 2006 that has already developed a line of high-end Beats by Dr. Dre headphones in partnership with the audio/video accessory company Monster. In addition to Dre, other artists and producers like Will.i.am, Pharrell, Timbaland and Polow Da Don helped HP engineers fine-tune the project.

The Envy 15 Beats, which also includes music-mixing software and a pair of Beats by Dr. Dre headphones, won't come cheaply, retailing for $2,299. Despite the relatively steep price, Iovine said during an Oct. 9 press conference that the Envy will appeal to anyone who values great sound.

Digital audio quality "has been degraded to such an extent that it's at times not even representative of what actually went on in the recording studio," he said. "With HP, we found a partner willing to take the step to improve the overall sound in the PC. This is for anyone who plays music."

Iovine and Dre's partnership with HP comes at a time when few consumers seem focused on sound quality. Even Apple and other consumer-technology companies rarely market their computers and digital media players as sounding better than the competition, choosing instead to tout features that offer improved versatility and convenience.

Carlos Montalvo, VP of product experience at HP, acknowledges that "the MP3 revolution was driven by convenience and portability." But h adds that there's a need in the mark for products that can deliver bett sound quality.

"As Jimmy and Dre say, it's about in proving the entire sound chain," Mo talvo says. "The emergence of the P notebook as the entertainment hub giv HP, artists and the music industry a opportunity to deliver to consume richer, better-sounding music."

HP accounted for the largest sha of U.S. and worldwide PC shipmen during the third quarter, according the market research firm IDC, givin Beats Electronics a high-profile partn with significant marketing and distr bution muscle.

The HP partnership also represen the latest chapter in Beats Electronic ambitious efforts to extend artist bran ing to consumer electronics. Monster Beats by Dr. Dre headphone line wi launch a new product Oct. 18: Hear beats by Lady Gaga, in-ear headphon that will retail for $100.

A representative for Beats Electro ics declined to discuss the financi terms of the Monster and HP deal HP's Montalvo says the PC maker h a "global, multiyear innovation and ma keting partnership" with Beats Electro ics, but declined to comment on th structure of the deal. ...

World Cafe Live Plans Expansion Into Delaware

Five years after launching the World Cafe Live in Philadelphia, founder Hal Real is planning on opening another similarly branded facility about 35 miles away in Wilmington, Del.

Real, who licenses the moniker of the nationally broadcast noncommercial WXPN radio show "World Cafe," is planning to open in 2011 a venue tentatively named World Cafe Live at the Queen. The venue will be the second of what he hopes will be many World Cafe Live-branded venues to open in the coming years.

Like the Philadelphia space, the new multi-level venue/restaurant will use the brand identity of the 18-year-old daily program (which is carried on NPR in 200 markets and broadcasts locally in select parts of Pennsylvania, Maryland and New Jersey) to draw concertgoers in the region.

"Everybody knows that WXPN is first-class and that the 'World Cafe' brand is their baby and very sacred to them," Real says, noting that the station's name gives his venue credibility with listeners. "It's got to be one of the most listened-to contemporary radio shows on all of radio—certainly public radio."

Cafe society: Exterior rendering of the new World Cafe Live venue in Wilmington, Del.; inset: Real Entertainment's HAL REAL

Under a long-term licensing agreement with Philadelphia-based WXPN, Real's Real Entertainment Group holds the exclusive rights to use the World Cafe Live name for music venues in North America. The original conditions of the licensing deal "anticipated there would be some expansion, and it kind of required that there would be an expansion in order to keep those rights," WXPN GM Roger LaMay says.

Bolstered by the success of World Cafe Live in Philadelphia, Real accepted an offer from the Wilmington city government to be part of a $250 million downtown revitalization plan that included the reopening of the Queen Theater, which has been dark since the '50s. To fund the project, the city teamed with local developer Buccini/Pollin Group to start the Light Up the Queen Foundation, which has helped raise the $21 million needed to restore the facility. After it's renovated during the next 20 months, Real's company will lease the theater from the foundation.

In addition to a 950-capacity ground level room and a 180-capacity second level with a restaurant, the World Cafe Live in Wilmington will contain a WXPN control room and small studio that can broadcast live concerts. "We won't have any permanent staff there, but the idea is that we can broadcast any shows or interview any artists from there," LaMay says. "So it will really broaden our reach in that respect."

Real says that launching a new music venue in a bad economy could be risky, but adds that the opening date is far away enough to put him at ease. "In some ways it's great that it won't be open until early 2011 when hopefully the economy is starting to turn around," he says. "We're not about huge touring artists and taking huge risks on a nightly basis—the economics are certainly more challenging now than they were, but we think we can make a go of it."

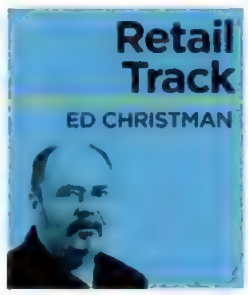
Real is also confident that the Wilmington venue's proximity to Philadelphia shouldn't cause a problem with overlap. "I don't really think it's going to cannibalize Philly," he says. "Some of those folks who can't get to Philly on a weeknight will find that they would go to Wilmington."

Although WXPN and World Cafe Live regularly team for events, LaMay and Real stress that the station and venue are two separate business entities and don't have any contractual obligations other than the licensing deal. Following the October 2004 opening of World Cafe Live, "there was enormous concern on the part of local promoters who thought we were going into competition with them," LaMay says. "For the most part, that's now gone because we've continued to work with everyone who promotes music that appeals to our listeners."

WXPN is also careful to make sure that World Cafe Live doesn't receive special treatment over other venues and promoters in the area. "We pay for spots just like Live Nation and everybody else does," Real says, adding that his venue also hosts concerts in conjunction with other radio stations in the market.

Meanwhile, there aren't any solid plans to open an additional World Cafe Live venue beyond Wilmington, but Real is already looking into potential new locations, which he declined to reveal. While he isn't opposed to establishing future venues outside of the Northeast, "we're very interested in expanding in this part of the country," he says. "We're not trying to be a Hard Rock Cafe, a Fillmore or a House of Blues—we're very much a part of the community that we're in." ••••

Dearly beloved: Roots Music Exporters says it sold overseas customers 42,000 copies of 'LotusFlow3r' by PRINCE (shown at the 2008 Coachella festival).



Across The Sea

Roots Music Exporters Cater To Foreign Demand For Hard-To-Find U.S. Titles

At a time when CD sales continue to plunge, it's unusual to find someone who's running to embrace the physical marketplace.

But that's exactly what former artist manager and music journalist John Lomax III is doing with his company Roots Music Exporters. The Nashville-based wholesaler sifts through U.S. music releases to track down hard-to-find titles, then sells them to wholesalers in Europe, Asia and Australia.

Roots Music Exporters is a modest two-person operation that also gets help from a couple of part-timers, Lomax's wife and a bookkeeper. But the growing business expects to top $1 million in annual revenue this year for the first time. Through the first nine months of 2009, Lomax says he shipped about 60,000 album copies to about 25 international wholesalers.

Lomax boasts a strong music pedigree: He's the grandson and nephew, respectively, of famed musicologists John Lomax and Alan Lomax. He's also the son of John Lomax Jr., who recorded for Folkways and managed Lightnin' Hopkins.

John III started Roots Music Exporters during his days as an artist manager for talents like Townes Van Zandt, Steve Earle and Kasey Chambers. At the time, he was trying to widen distribution beyond the United States for another artist he handled, David Schnaufer, a renowned dulcimer player. Lomax recalls attending the MIDEM convention in 1996 to move Schnaufer's album abroad and realizing that there was demand around the world for other rare U.S. releases. Lomax launched Roots Music Exporters upon his return while continuing to manage artists. In 2001, the exporting work became a full-time venture.

Business really took off in the middle of this decade when big-name acts like Garth Brooks, the Rolling Stones and Prince started cutting exclusive deals with retailers like Wal-Mart, Best Buy and Target. So far this year, Lomax says he has sold nearly 5,000 Brooks albums, which he still buys from Wal-Mart, even though the artist's albums can be found at other chains.

Lomax says he hit the jackpot selling Prince's Target-exclusive set "LotusFlow3r," selling 42,000 copies, or 11% of the 385,000 copies counted by Nielsen SoundScan. Lomax's claim couldn't be independently confirmed, as Target doesn't "release information on guest purchases," a company spokeswoman says.

"We started buying Prince from Target corporate," Lomax says. "They would ship it to a Target store nearby and we would go pay and pick up. At one point we bought 8,000 at one time . . . It was pretty interesting when I presented a check for $95,000 to them."

Then word came down from Target corporate that bulk sales could no longer be made, Lomax says. So he started buying out Prince inventory at individual stores in the surrounding area and in other states by calling ahead so the stores wouldn't be caught short when he cleaned them out. After placing the call, he says, he just goes to the customer service desk, where the product is waiting for him.

"I drove down to Atlanta and in two days got about 3,500 [Prince copies] from 16 stores," he says of a weekend trip in June.

Lomax isn't the only music merchandiser mining exclusive albums at big-box chains. Most independent merchants, and even chain retailers, buy plenty of exclusive product from the big-box retailers. It's also well-known that U.S. wholesalers shop for exclusives at retail so they can ship those titles overseas. But most wholesalers like to keep a low profile to avoid complaints from major labels and artist managers about how the practice hurts their overseas sales and marketing plans.

When an act or its manager cuts a deal to give a retailer an exclusive, such agreements typically include terms of trade, like whether it can be sold in bulk to other merchants or wholesalers. But those agreements are hard to police. And the U.S. Copyright Act's first-sale doctrine allows a copyrighted work to change ownership as long as additional copies aren't made. That, coupled with the escalating trend of established artists breaking away from labels to cut their own distribution deals, leaves Lomax feeling optimistic that his business will keep growing—that is, as long as music is being sold physically.

Meanwhile, the exclusives keep coming. Kiss' new album "Sonic Boom" hit Wal-Mart stores Oct. 10, and Lomax says he expects to see strong demand for the title. ••••

Verizon Turns To Artist Apps To Recharge Mobile Music Offerings

Record labels disappointed with the low adoption of music services on mobile phones often say wireless operators need to get more aggressive with their music services if the mobile music market is to escape its current rut.

Careful what you ask for.

Verizon Wireless—already one of the more music-focused operators—is turning up the volume by developing and selling its own artist apps, the first of which is coming from Pearl Jam Oct. 19. Apps from Green Day and Keith Urban will be released in the weeks ahead, and all will precede the launch of the operator's new VCast Apps program—Verizon's answer to the iPhone App Store—which is expected to go live by year's end.

By itself, offering three artist apps is hardly the kind of strong music statement labels are seeking from wireless operators. But it is certainly a notable escalation of Verizon's music strategy, one that could generate as much tension as opportunity between the operator and its music industry partners.

On the positive side, the apps illustrate the potential of Verizon's new open development program. The operator wants to help jointly create new apps with developers and device manufacturers by providing access to network services like location data, messaging services and billing functions.

The Pearl Jam app, for example, lets users buy and download music directly from within the app rather than forcing them to find it in the VCast Music Store. Selecting "buy" in the app simply directs users to the section of the VCast store for that song, album or artist. The same goes for ringtones or ringback tones.

Dialed in: PEARL JAM; right: screen grabs from the band's Verizon artist app.

Access to Verizon's location data lets artists send news alerts or ticket discounts to fans in a specific city. Soon the ability to buy tickets and even merch will be added to the app.

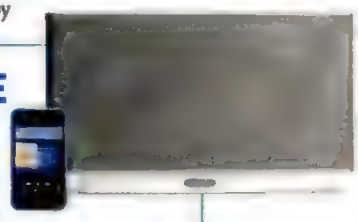
Artists can also set their own prices for content and give away items like ringtones to fans as gifts or prizes. And Verizon will advertise the launch by sending an alert to any customer who has purchased a ringtone or other content by the participating artists and inviting them to download the new app.

It's a pretty compelling take on the artist app model. But it's also potentially disruptive for record labels—by design. Verizon and other wireless operators have so far moved slowly on music services because they don't like the economics. Labels, they say, want to keep the majority of revenue while leaving the operators to carry all the marketing cost.

"There's still a reluctance to step away from old business models," Verizon director of strategic business development and partner management Ed Ruth told attendees of Billboard's Mobile Entertainment Live conference recently. "Innovation has to come from both sides, and until that paradigm shifts, we'll probably be at a stalemate."

These artist apps are Verizon's way of breaking that standoff. It's pitching these apps to artists who are either already out of their label relationships or who will soon be as a way of avoiding those difficult licensing negotiations. And their offer is tempting—distribution over a nationwide wireless network with nearly 90 million subscribers (not to mention potential synergies with its landline Internet service provider and FiOS TV services), tour sponsorship, possible features in TV ads and now collaboration on digital apps for a range of BlackBerry- and Android-powered devices.

"This is a chance for [artists] to distribute their content directly to consumers," Ruth says. "Apps are the new format. They are the way for artists to have a one-to-one conversation with their fans."



Verizon will work with labels and signed artists who also want to create apps for the Verizon platform, but the best opportunities will go to artists free to work with the operator directly. While that means fewer artists, it gives Verizon access to the exclusive content it hopes will translate to not only better profit margins, but also attract new music-minded customers and keep existing ones.

Whether Verizon or any other mobile company can effectively compete with iTunes isn't important—it can't. Nor can it replace the role of a record label, and it's of no use for traditional necessities like radio promotion, physical distribution and so on.

Still, labels should take heed. Verizon is signaling it will offer the full power of its nationwide wireless network, retail presence and advertising dollars to artists free to strike content deals outside the confines of a label licensing agreement. How's that for aggressive? ••••

ROCK THE HOUSE

Why bother connecting an iPhone to multiple speaker docks when you can use the device to control a sound system that reaches your entire house instead? Sonos, the multiroom streaming music system, gives iPhone owners that option with its new Sonos ZonePlayer S5.

The S5 lets users use their iPhone or iPod Touch to play music from their iTunes library or online music services like Rhapsody, Last.fm, Napster, Pandora, Sirius Internet Radio and Deezer. The S5 base unit has built-in speakers and requires additional units to stream music to other rooms.

The S5 will hit retail shelves in late October for $400. —AB

Guitar heroes: METALLICA often promotes shows with Frank Productions.

Evolve Or Die

Indie Promoter Frank Productions Has Intelligent Designs On Concert Booking

This year's commemoration of Charles Darwin's 200th birthday has intensified the discussion of natural selection. But the concert business has always subscribed to an especially harsh form of Darwinism: Adapt or die.

Those who successfully evolve, however, can thrive. Consider Frank Productions, the Madison, Wis.-based independent concert promotion firm founded more than 30 years ago by Herb Frank. At a time when promoter consolidation has made it tougher for independents to compete with giants like Live Nation and AEG Live, Frank Productions has carved out enough of a niche to get its first listing as a finalist (alongside Chicago's Jam Productions and Austin's C3 Presents) for the top independent promoter award, U.S. at the Billboard Touring Awards. The awards, which will be handed out at a Nov. 5 reception in New York, are determined based on box-office grosses reported to Billboard Boxscore as opposed to a vote.

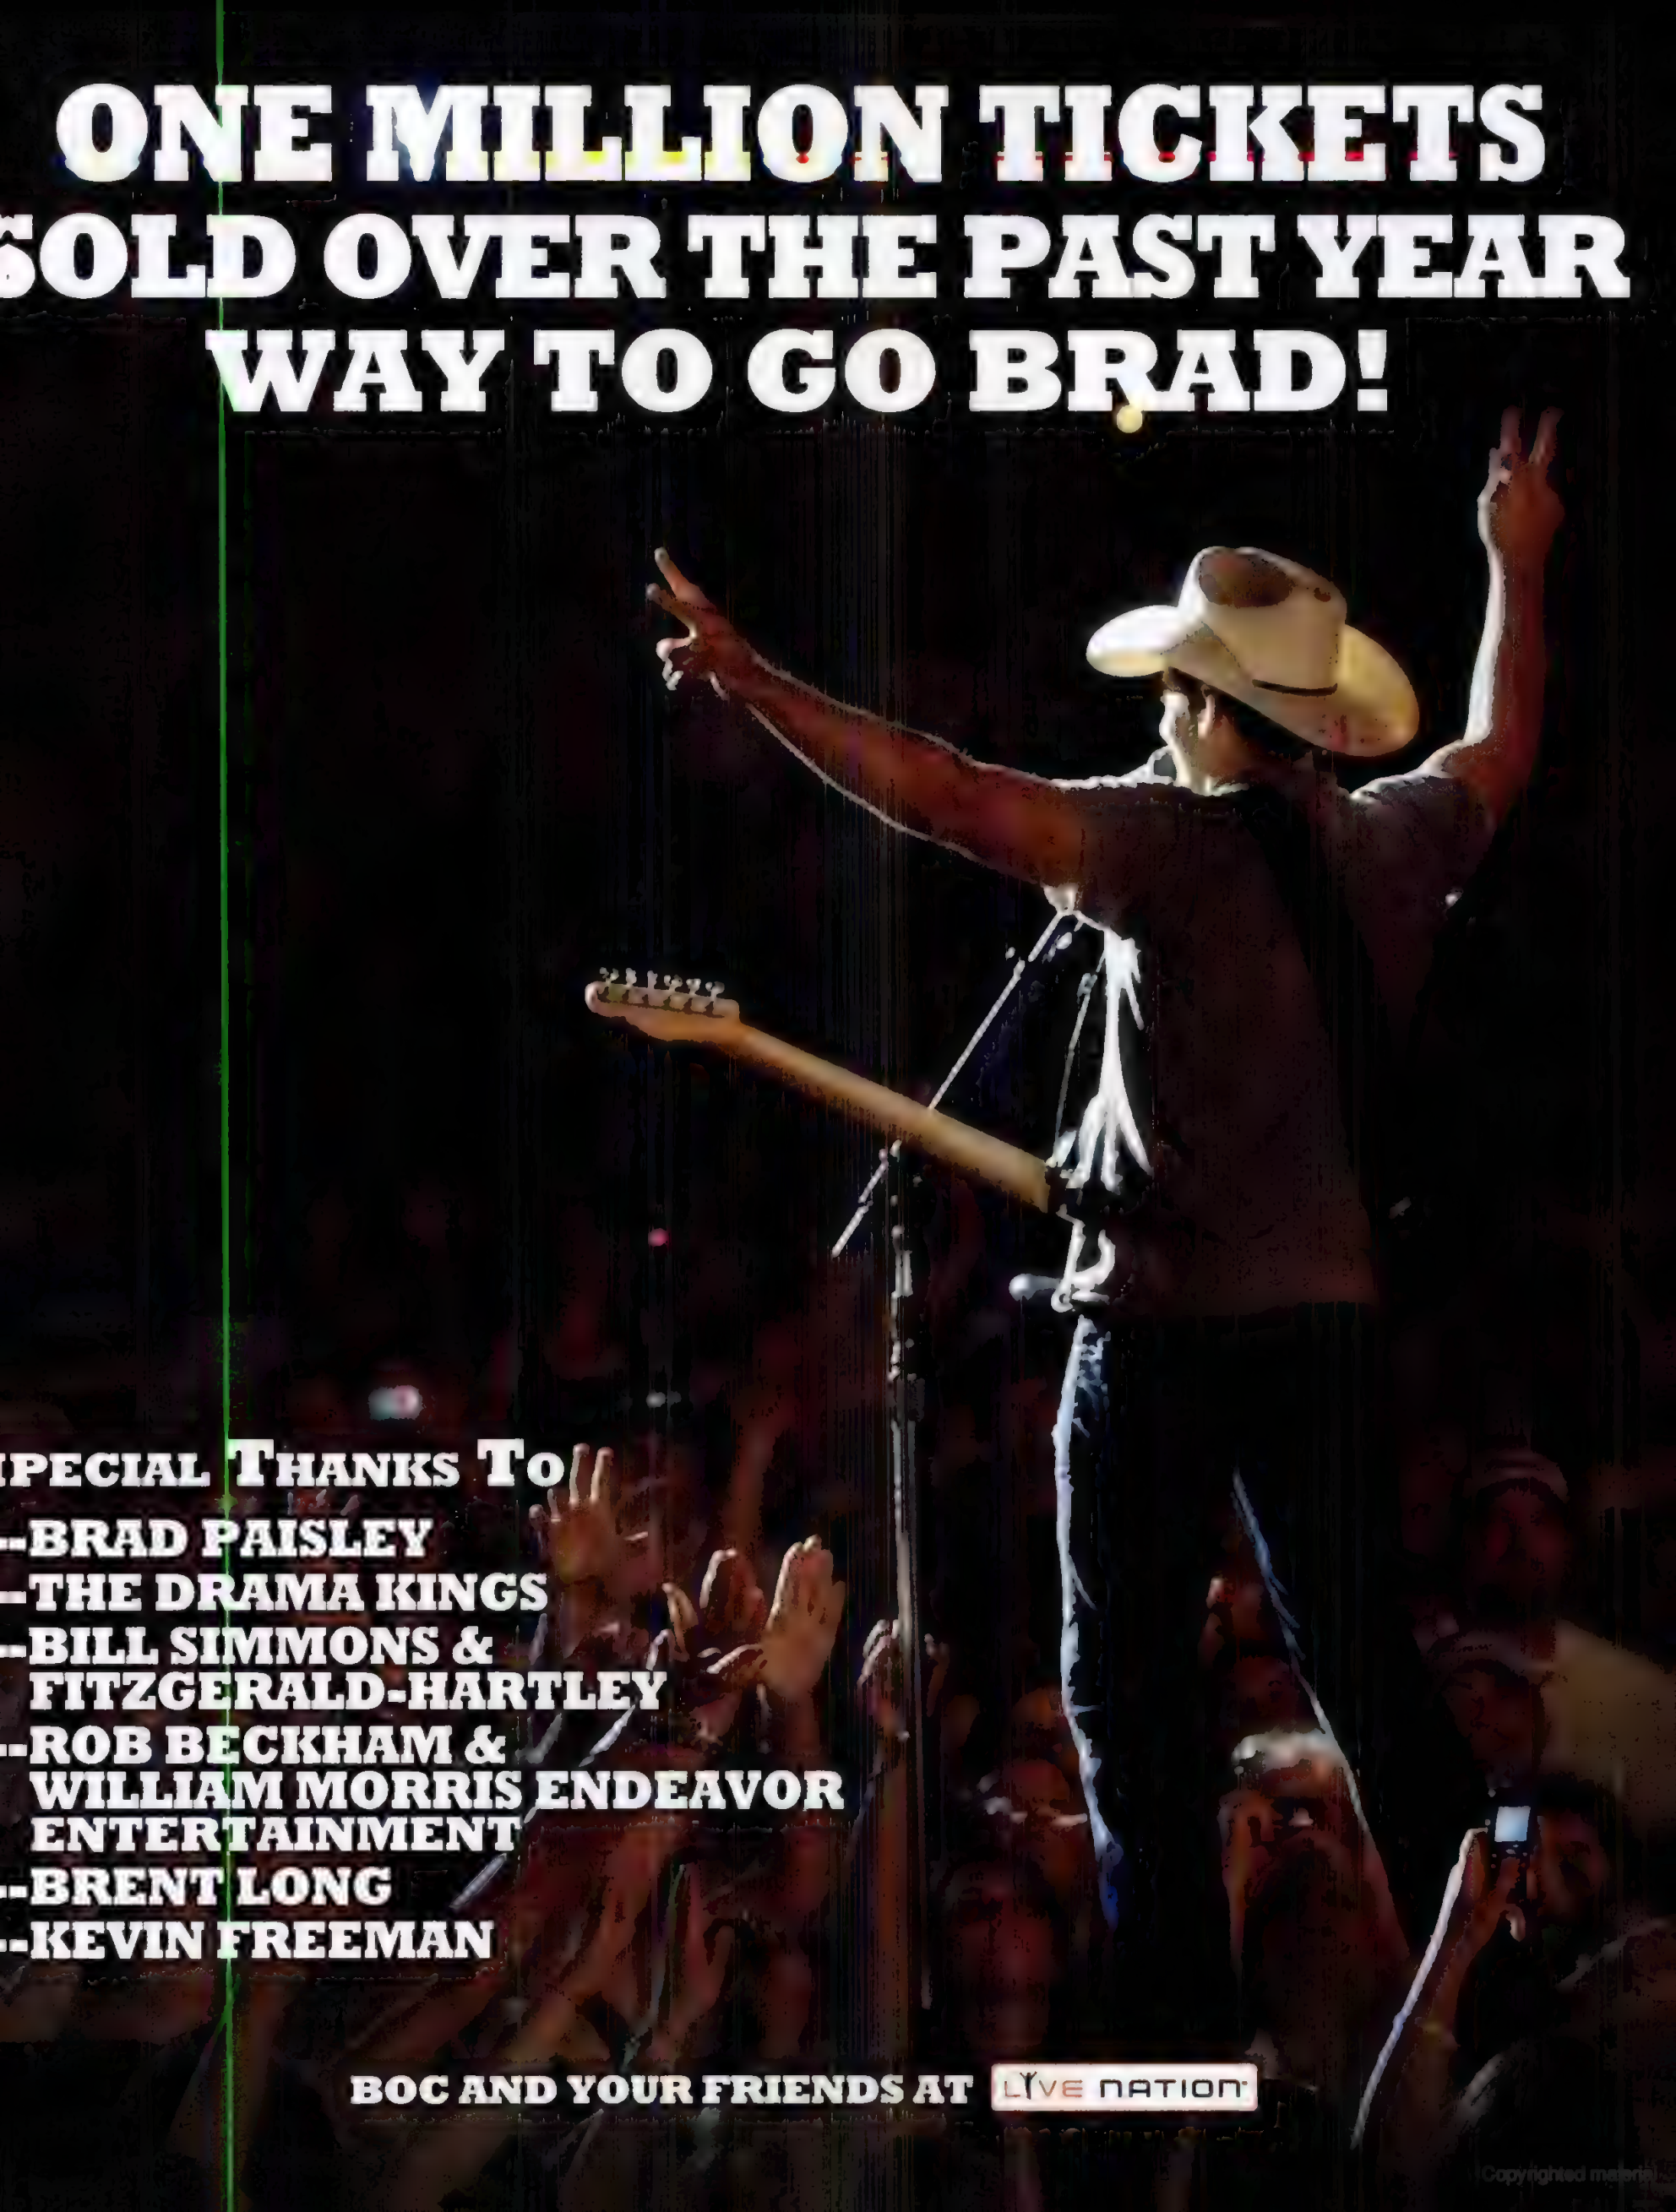
Frank Productions partners Larry and Fred Frank successfully grew a small promoter of country music and family entertainment into a healthy midsize company that focuses its efforts on hard rock bands playing markets too small to make much of an impression on corporate radar.

"When my brother and I got heavily involved in [the company] we started with mainstream country—Alan Jackson, Brooks & Dunn," Fred Frank says. "Our roots have always been country, but I have to tell you in the past six or more years we've morphed into about 80% rock, mostly active rock. That seems to be our niche."

That focus has paid off. "Larry and myself decided to do what nobody else was doing: taking hot, new, up-and-coming rock bands and selling them to the markets where the big guys aren't going anymore," Frank says. "We're taking these bands into markets that don't usually get shows, the Mankatos and Topekas of the world. We're exposing these bands to new audiences and our numbers have been through the roof."

The company's success in 2009 was drive largely by the whole tours it promoted for Dis turbed, Buckcherry and Avenged Sever fold and a package with Mudvayne and Blac Label Society. The company also frequentl works with Metallica. "We just did three las weekend, all sold out: Tampa [and] Fort Lau erdale [Fla.] and Atlanta, all million-dolla grosses," Frank says.

Since they run a family-owned compan the Frank brothers can chart their own cours "That's one of the luxuries being a promoter in charge your own destiny," Frank say "We're able to change quick and roll with the times."



Of course, that same inde pendence also means th Franks don't have the deepe pockets. "We say this to a lot people: 'If it's just about th money, then we're probably n your guys,' " Frank says. " 'We all know who got the checkbook. But if it's about buildin a career and longevity, give us a call, becaus that's what we're all about.' "

Adam Kornfeld, Metallica's agent at Arti Group International, says of Frank Produ tions, "It's about time they were a finalist f top independent promoter. We have worke with them on both big and small shows acro the country for many years. Larry, Fred an their staff are great to work with."

Allen Kovac, president of Buckcherry management company 10th Street Ente tainment, adds, "Working with Frank Pr ductions is a partnership with a capital 'P They really understand how integrated ma keting and smart tour packaging combine with a reasonable ticket price are what wo in this economy. As managers, we are loo ing for innovative ways to market and pre ent in changing times, and the Franks allo us that flexibility."

Frank knows that independents have b come an endangered species in the last decad "We look at ourselves as being very fortunate he says. "There are not a whole lot of ind pendent promoters left. They've either bee bought out or squashed out. But we continu to fight for our niche, and we feel like we' in a pretty good spot right now."

And The Winner Is. . .

Univision Makes The 'Idol' Model Work, With A Few Tweaks

Music-themed reality contests like "American Idol" have traditionally been a losing proposition for Spanish-language networks in the United States.

Sing while you're winning: DIEGO DIBOS

Although the format has flourished in countries like Spain and Mexico, in the States home-grown Latin music reality shows have failed to garner substantial interest and ratings. One reason behind the lack of success was the exorbitant costs of synch and mechanical licenses, which sometimes exceeded Latin TV production budgets.

But now the Univision network is bucking the trend with its reality show "Viva El Sueño" (Live the Dream), a weekly two-hour live competition on which the up-and-coming acts already have record deals.

The show, which airs Sundays at 8 p.m., was the eighth-most-watched prime-time program among Hispanic viewers for the week ending Oct. 4, according to Nielsen data. This week it was the eighth-most-watched show, with an average of 2.5 million people and 1.5 million households tuning in.

While part of the show's success can be attributed to Univision's clout and multimedia promotion—the show is heavily touted on Univision.com and its judges are all Univision radio personalities—that is just part of the equation.

"Viva el Sueño," produced by a team led by Cisco Suárez (producer for Premios Juventud and the Latin Grammy Awards) is detail-oriented and more focused on talent than on good looks.

Prior to the start of production, the network cleared the use of hundreds of songs, almost all of them hits. Contestants are accompanied by a live band that performs original arrangements they learn and rehearse every week. Prior to the show's taping, which is done before a live audience, contestants rehearse for two days with guest artists at the Gibson showroom in Miami.

In other words, subpar acts really don't have a space on this show—the onus to perform well under pressure is too great—and this was a powerful lure for labels to convince signed artists to participate.

"Viva el Sueño" kicked off Aug. 30 with 14 artists, and one is eliminated every week by audience vote. Although the bulk of contestants come from Mexico, overall competitors represent the vast array of styles and nationalities necessary to attract the broad U.S. Latin audience.

While those who last longest get the most exposure, even early losers gain, says Paula Kaminsky, marketing VP for Sony Latin, which had two artists on the show—Bárbara and Zuly. Both were eliminated but stirred a strong reaction online, measured by new fans and comments and visits to blogs.

"These kinds of shows are very important windows of opportunity," Kaminsky says. "Particularly the fact that Univision feels it's important to work with labels in finding new talent, and exposing this new talent is key for any artist development story."

Warner has four artists on the show—Fedro, Paco de María, Diego Dibos and Donatella, who was eliminated last week. All have albums out, but, according to marketing VP Gabriella Martínez, the show allows for the development of a marketing strategy almost in real time.

"Their image and style get promoted and known far quicker than it would normally take us," Martínez says.

"Viva el Sueño" is slated to run for six more weeks, during which ratings are expected to rise as the show continues to gain momentum.

The winner will receive $200,000 in cash. But one of the bigger prizes to be gained from this show is that given the proper promotion and exposure, new artists can garner big ratings—as they do in the mainstream—leading to sales and revenue for labels. ••••

THE BILLBOARD ¿Q&A?

esus Lara has been busy recently, celebrating the third anniversary of MTV's U.S. Latin channel MTV Tr3s and planning the eighth installment of Los Premios MTV Latin America, the network's annual awards show for the region. Lara, who is the senior VP of music and talent/artist relations for both channels, helped preside over an ambitious new multicity format for the show, which saw pretaped ceremonies in Bogota, Colombia; Buenos Aires; and Mexico City brought together in a live broadcast from Los Angeles' Gibson Amphitheatre Oct. 15.

multi-city show across atin America sounds like logistical challenge. Can be done live?

certainly adds some more omplexity to the whole proess. Our first and foremost bjective was to come up with a new and innovative format that can really take the format to the people. It's the first time we [did] it, so we just needed to make sure that we can design something that was actually executable. We want to keep building a bigger and better show every year, so we'll see how it goes this year and build on that.

What have you learned about balancing English and Spanish content in the United States? For example, MTV Tr3s and other Latino youth channels have been incorporating telenovelas.

The U.S. marketplace continues to be influenced by Latin America and vice versa. It's a continuous exchange of music culture. [The Venezuelan teen telenovela] "Isa T.K.M." became a massive success for us at Nickelodeon Latin America. We programmed it on MTV Tr3s because we strongly felt it would find an audience, and it did.

Has increasing MTV Tr3s' regional Mexican programming led to ratings results?

Sure. The U.S. marketplace is a very complex marketplace. When you talk about Latino music, there's segments of Latino music, and that's a very important segment. You can't ignore it.

Is the music industry fully aware of how exposure on MTV Tr3s can help move the needle?

The majority of them do get it. The Internet has democratized music to such an extent. I do still strongly believe that you have a need for programming—media companies that program music and have an intelligent push. If you just have a plethora of Internet sites out there where people can find music, I'm sure they'll find great music. But if you don't have media companies giving the audiences intelligent pushes behind particular artists, I think it's very difficult to break through the clutter.

DIGITAL DOWNLOAD THEMED CAFE OPENS

Stars Café Digital, a new chain of cafes in Argentina, opened its first location Oct. 2 in a Buenos Aires mall.

The cafes feature machines where patrons can legally download music to their phones, MP3 players, CDs or USB drives. The machines offer 1 million tracks from the four major labels at a price that reportedly is an average of 52 cents, though some songs sell for as much as $1.17.

The chain is part of Vi-Da Global, which operates the download site Bajamusica.com. Dell, Heineken, wireless carrier Personal Y and Banco Macro are sponsors.

SGAE ISSUES COLLEGE SCHOLARSHIPS

The Spanish collecting society SGAE will issue seven scholarships to study at the Berklee College of Music in Boston, as it prepares to open the first Berklee center outside the United States in Valencia, on Spain's southeast Mediterranean coast, in 2011.

The scholarships are part of a deal signed between Berklee and SGAE in 2008 to build the 27-story Valencia center, whose latest estimated cost exceeds $150 million. Berklee Valencia will offer advanced courses currently unavailable in Spain but taught in Boston.

The application deadline for the scholarships is Nov. 24; they will cover an academic period from September 2010 to July 2013. Three scholarships were awarded last year, and the Spanish students and SGAE members began their courses in September.

Berklee Valencia will be the star project of SGAE's Arteria program, which envisages the construction of several cultural centers in Europe and Latin America. Some already operate in cities like Buenos Aires and Mexico City. Arteria aims to promote international artistic exchange.

A few of SGAE's 95,000 members—mainly from the music publishing sector—have criticized Berklee Valencia and Arteria for advocating real estate development rather than cultural promotion.

HOW TO:

MAKE A T-SHIRT THAT REALLY SELLS

by DELL FURANO, CEO, LIVE NATION MERCHANDISE

Retail sales of music are struggling, but no one can download a T-shirt. So merchandise is becoming increasingly important to the music business—especially for touring bands, and creating must-have swag can be central to the success of a marketing campaign.

"Your concert shirt is your badge and tells everyone a great deal about who you are," says Dell Furano, CEO of Live Nation Merchandise. Band T-shirts not only promote an artist but also generate revenue. "One of the very positive trends in the past several years is that the quality, colors, styles and printing techniques have improved dramatically," Furano says. "As a result, you can provide better quality to your fans and still maintain reasonable prices."

Furano's division runs the official Web sites and merch businesses for dozens of acts including U2, the Beatles, Bruce Springsteen, Kiss, Madonna and Coldplay. He has spent more than 30 years in the business, helping artists translate their music and personas into collectible, wearable statements for fans.

In this economic climate, however, even small bands can use some advice on how to create a cost-effective T-shirt that will fly off the merch tables.

1. TIE THE T TO THE TOUR

It's axiom No. 1 in the merchandise bible: The best-selling merch is the products with designs related to the imagery, photo, itinerary and logos that promote your tour and its twin brother, the new album cover. And many times they're the same or related. Coldplay's "Viva La Vida or Death and All His Friends" artwork is a classic example [of album art that was repurposed for tour art and high-selling merchandise]; Bruce Springsteen's biggest-selling shirts right now are related to the "Working on a Dream" tour and album. And, yes, a staple that hasn't changed in 35 years is that everyone likes the tour T-shirts with the itinerary on the back. Everyone likes to see the dates, turn the shirt around and point to their city. It connects everyone. Everyone still looks back on the Rolling Stones' Steel Wheels tour, U2's Joshua Tree tour, Madonna's Blond Ambition. So time-stamp it in terms of year, in terms of city and venue.

2. LIMIT THE OPTIONS—MORE IS NOT MORE

One of the most common myths in the merch business is that more is better. More isn't better when it comes to product lines, so don't offer too many different options with the thought they'll attract more sales. The selling window at the concert is brief. Fans arrive later and later, need to go to the bathroom, buy a beer, find their seat and at the end they want to leave—the longer they have to stand in line while people look and choose, the more sales you lose. Ask Kiss' manager Doc McGhee about this. He uses a stopwatch to clock the transaction times. If it's too long, he has us reduce the choices.

3. BE STYLE-INCLUSIVE

While you don't want to give people too many choices, you do want to make sure all your fans can show off their loyalty. We sell a lot of women's-fit shirts, as well as double extra-large, so it's smart to make those styles available—sweatshirts for cool weather, children's sizes, etc.

4. WEIGH THE COST OF EACH PRINT

The more prints you put on a shirt—front print, back print, sleeve print—the higher the cost. If a sleeve print costs, say, 30 cents per shirt, you can charge an extra dollar for the shirt, 25% of which you might have to give to the venue—but you don't want to sell a shirt for $34 or $36, you want to sell it for $35 or $40 because of the transaction time at a show. So adding a sleeve print so many times—do the bands like it? Yes. Do the fans think it's cool? Yeah. But we don't think it generates more sales or total revenue.

5. STAND OUT FROM THE CROWD, LITERALLY

It goes without saying that your T-shirt needs a great design, but that's not necessarily enough. Last year we worked closely with Tom Petty's manager Tony Dimitriades and came up with a burgundy shirt with this great bust print of Tom in an off-yellow that we sold at the Pemberton festival in Canada. And you could see those 10,000 fans who bought Tom Petty shirts of the 50,000 in attendance—from airplanes, from the stage, as you walked through the crowd, in a picture in the newspaper the next day—because the shirt was so distinctive. And I told Tony, "You deserve the credit." When this shirt was up on the wall with the other 40 shirts of acts playing at the festival, it completely jumped off the wall. Same thing in an arena—merchandise has got to grab your attention and pull you over.

Tokyo Hang Up

Mobile Market Changes Lead To Decline In Japanese Digital Sales

TOKYO—A ripple of apprehension has spread across Japan's recording business in the wake of its first digital sales dip.

Japan's success in offsetting declining physical sales with digital has been the envy of other territories in recent times. Notably, demand for mobile music has been increasing despite a drop-off in other markets—including the United States, where the RIAA reported a 7.3% fall in 2008.

But insiders say the slowing rate at which Japanese consumers replace their mobile phones, combined with piracy and a weak release schedule, has taken its toll. The Recording Industry Assn. of Japan registered its first quarterly digital sales decline in the April-June period, when values fell 2% year on year to 22.1 billion yen (then the equivalent of $228.2 million). In comparison, second-quarter 2008 digital sales had risen 28% year on year to 22.5 billion yen (which equaled $212.8 million at that time).

The RIAJ insists there's no need to panic. "The market is stable," GM Shigeta Shoji says, adding that first-quarter digital sales stayed flat at 22.5 billion yen ($227.8 million) and first-half sales only fell 1%. Shoji also notes that small quarterly changes can reflect "a stronger or weaker release schedule."

Universal Music Japan GM of sales, marketing and digital Naohiro Fukao says the digital drop is significant, but partly attributable to a "weak release schedule." He notes that the first half of 2008 featured major mobile sellers from Japanese stars like Thelma Aoyama, GReeeeN and Hikaru Utada, but such huge hits were lacking in 2009.

Sources agree that the cell phone market's slowing growth has hit mobile music, which dominates Japan's digital sales (88% of retail value in 2008, according to the RIAJ).

The trade organization Telecommunications Carriers Assn. of Japan says total mobile subscriptions increased by 355,000 in April (its most recent figures); that figure was 408,000 in April 2008. According to the IFPI, Japan had 110.6 million mobile phone subscriptions in 2008.

The slowdown followed an October 2007 government recommendation that carriers reduce mobile phone fees. Carriers complied but began charging for handsets, which had previously been free with subscriptions.

Before the change, "users had replaced their handsets every four to six months," says Hiroshi Yamazaki, GM of digital distribution at the market-leading mobile music store Reco Choku. Yamazaki estimates handset replacement now happens every 12-18 months.

That, he says, has a "twofold effect" on music sales. "First, more users have phones which aren't compatible with certain [emerging] mobile music formats, and when a user gets a new phone, they're more likely to make music purchases."

The RIAJ figures show master ringtones were hardest hit in the first and second quarters. In the first quarter, their retail value fell 24% year on year to 4.4 billion yen ($45.4 million), while an 18% drop to 4.1 billion yen ($44.4 million) occurred in the second quarter.

Full-track mobile downloads and online sales fared better, however. In the second quarter, full-track mobile download sales stayed unchanged at 12 billion yen ($130 million), while online sales rose 8% to 2.4 billion yen ($26 million).

In an attempt to bolster revenue, Yamazaki says Reco Choku is engaging in "one-to-one marketing" to update consumers digitally about artists and releases "that appeal to their personal preferences" through a free membership scheme.

Fukao says Universal will step up digital marketing, including distribution of more videoclips and digital booklets with mobile tracks. On the A&R front, he adds, "we'll create more [Japanese pop] lyrics and tracks that appeal to women in their 20s who are the main target for mobile distribution."

Piracy remains problematic, however. The RIAJ claims mobile phone users illegally downloaded 407 million master ringtones and full-length tracks from October 2007 to September 2008, compared with 329 million legal sales.

And Fukao remains realistic about the industry's challenges. "The more people get used to mobile [formats]," he says, "the easier it becomes to find ways to download tracks illegally." ...

Sanity Regained

Management Buyout Aims To Boost CD, DVD Sales

Last year's physical product sales boosted second quarter at Sanity

BRISBANE, Australia—Following a management buyout, the Australian retailer Sanity Entertainment is staking its future on consumer interest in physical formats.

A consortium led by the Sydney-based merchant's CEO Ray Itaoui recently acquired the company from its parent Brett Blundy Retail Capital (BBRC) for an undisclosed sum (Billboard.biz, Sept. 24).

The 238-store operation includes the Sanity, Virgin and HMV brands Down Under and, according to Itaoui, will continue to devote about 49% of its floor space to CDs, with most of the remaining space for stocking DVDs and a small space for other merchandise.

That underlines the fact that, for Itaoui, "the core of what we do at Sanity is physical product."

"The key focus for us is as music and movie specialists," he adds. "We really want to get back to what we do well."

Despite Sanity shuttering its LoadIt music subscription service Jan. 1, less than five months after launch, Itaoui says digital is "an important part of what we do" and that Sanity is gearing up to deliver digital rights management-free content from its Web site (Sanity.com.au).

Digital sales have taken off in Australia in recent months (Billboard, Oct. 17), with the sector worth $37.1 million Australian ($32.6 million) in the first half of 2009, according to the Australian Recording Industry Assn. But CDs still account for 90% of all album sales, with Itaoui claiming Sanity is "seeing growth in physical music product in our like-for-like stores."

Sanity has another year of the licensing rights to the HMV name Down Under, through an October 2005 deal; the Virgin name is licensed until 2015. Neither BBRC nor Itaoui would comment on the deal's structure, which, although never publicly announced, was completed in early September. Retail sources estimate the price was around $30 million Australian ($26.6 million). Itaoui won't identify his financial backers.

The first Sanity Entertainment store opened in 1992 in Melbourne. At its peak at the turn of the decade, it was Australia's music market leader with 300 stores. However, label/distributor estimates now give it second place with 23%-25% of the market behind JB Hi-Fi's 40% (Billboard, July 25).

Labels have welcomed the Sanity developments.

"We feel very positive about the management buyout," says Universal Music Australia managing director George Ash. "The core focus of the new group is music and movies, which is music to our ears."

"I respect the maverick spirit they are showing," says EMI Music Australia chairman Mark Poston. "Ray and his team have proven to be smart operators in looking to broaden their store coverage regionally."

Colin Daniels, managing director of the Sydney-based indie Inertia, welcomes the move but warns that Sanity needs to "improve its range and re-establish its connection with customers."

Some label sources suggest Sanity had lost focus in recent years, concentrating too much on top 40 albums, cheap boxed sets and DVDs.

JB Hi-Fi's rise to prominence has been fueled by a deeper range of music product than Sanity and cheaper prices. Paramore's chart-topping new album, "Brand New Eyes," is $19.99 Australian ($17.80) at JB Hi-Fi and $21.99 Australian ($19.50) at Sanity.

JB Hi-Fi didn't return calls requesting comment, but Gavin Ward, executive director of the 170-store Leading Edge Music chain, says JB Hi-Fi will continue as the market leader. "This isn't going to affect [JB Hi-Fi] one way or another," he adds.

However, Itaoui is confident he's made the right move and remains bullish that Sanity can avoid the issues that have caused other international retailers to shutter in recent times.

"I know the numbers and the business," he says. "Am I nervous? No." ••••

HOT OCTOBER NIGHTS

Spanish Telecoms, Creative Industries Fight Over Illegal Downloads

MADRID—The Spanish government faces a "hot autumn of confrontation" with the creative industries if it doesn't get its act together on unauthorized downloading, says Joan Navarro, director of lobbying group the Coalition of Creators & Content Industries. The coalition's members include the IFPI affiliate Promusicae, authors' society SGAE and representatives of the cinema and software sectors.

Navarro's threat follows first-half Promusicae figures showing music sales fell 35% to €87.7 million ($128 million) this year, compared with €126.2 million ($185 million) in first-half 2008.

Promusicae blames online piracy for stunting digital growth and harming physical sales. From January to June, mobile sales—previously the dominant digital format in Spain—fell 37.4% to €6.4 million ($9.4 million); online digital sales rose 68%, but only totaled €7.1 million ($10.4 million).

Navarro suggests mobile's slump partly reflects that the novelty of downloading to phones has passed for many young people, but insists piracy is the real problem.

Promusicae claims more than 2 billion tracks were illegally downloaded in 2008. "The situation is desperate," Promusicae president Antonio Guisasola says, adding, "It is a joke to think that, in the current situation, there could exist a viable digital market [here] similar to that in neighboring countries."

The coalition wants the government to resolve an impasse with the trade group Redtel, which represents telecoms and Internet service providers including Telefónica, Vodafone and France Telecom/Orange.

Lengthy talks between Redtel and the coalition on tackling unauthorized downloading collapsed in April. "For one year we had been insisting the solution must involve the collaboration of all sides to generate an attractive and legal Internet content offer," Redtel director-general Maite Arcos says. However, she adds that the coalition was "entrenched in solutions that demand penalizing Internet users."

Pain in Spain: Promusicae president ANTONIO GUISASOLA (top) and EMI Spain director general SIMONE BOSÉ

So far, the coalition says it has received conflicting responses from the government. In September, Secretary of State for Telecommunications Francisco Ros deferred action until after a May 2010 European telecommunications ministers' meeting in Madrid.

But shortly after, industry minister Miguel Sebastián wrote to both sides expressing his desire to close a deal before 2009 ends, saying it was "absolutely necessary" that talks resume.

Redtel, however, has refused to return until the government puts proposals on the table. Navarro says Sebastián promised that would happen by the end of October, hence his threat of unspecified "confrontation" if none materialize.

The music industry is hampered by a 2006 recommendation from Spain's attorney general that peer-to-peer exchanges of copyrighted files be viewed as legal, provided there isn't a profit motive. That makes it "virtually impossible to take offenders to court," Guisasola says. "There's little labels can do."

A May IFPI report said 81% of Spanish Internet users younger than 24 years old download copyrighted content illegally. However, Arcos suggests that's largely because fewer legal services operate in Spain than in other established European markets.

Although Apple's iTunes does operate in Spain, Arcos notes that other key players, including Amazon, have yet to launch. "If Spaniards could gain [easier] access to tracks online," she says, "it would reduce piracy."

Nevertheless, the difficulty in competing with unauthorized free music was illustrated in June when subscription-based streaming operation Yes.fm withdrew its service after it attracted slightly fewer than 5,000 subscribers in eight months.

Individual labels say they're stepping up online efforts. EMI Spain director general Simone Bosé says he's working with existing services to bundle exclusive merchandising, movie or concert tickets with download sales. "We are also looking to establish direct consumer relationships through [various] online tools," he says.

Meanwhile, Universal Spain director Fabrice Benoit insists the industry must stand together and "make government understand that while it isn't checking the problem, Spain's cultural patrimony is being destroyed."

Guisasola adds, "If the government does not act as soon as possible, it will go down in history as the government that helped do away with the local record industry." ••••

Billy Mann

The EMI A&R guru talks about taking international artists global.

Billy Mann is the man with the golden ears. As a songwriter and producer, he's worked on projects from the likes of Take That, Joss Stone, Celine Dion and Ricky Martin, helping to sell more than 75 million albums worldwide. His collaborations with fellow Philadelphian Pink have produced hits including "God Is a DJ," "Stupid Girls," "I'm Not Dead" and "Nobody Knows."

Having joined the EMI Music investor board in November 2007, he became chief creative officer in January 2008 and was promoted in July of that year to oversee the major label's A&R for the world outside North America and the United Kingdom. He works alongside Nick Gatfield, president of new music—North America, the United Kingdom and Ireland, as part of EMI's new music unit, with a mission to strengthen local rosters and steer international acts toward global success.

Mann can now point to French dance artist David Guetta as proof that his approach is working. Guetta's "Sexy Chick" is his biggest international hit so far, peaking at No. 34 on the Billboard Hot 100, and the album "One Love" has sold more than 700,000 copies worldwide, according to EMI.

Mann spoke to Billboard about the challenges in making EMI attractive to artists again after the upheaval of recent years.

David Guetta's manager, Caroline Prothero, praises you for pushing his success as an artist, as opposed to a DJ. What did you do that wasn't done before?

When David played me "When Love Takes Over," my first thought was, "The song feels like a smash, but how do we make sure people understand David is the driving artistic force behind these records? How do we build that international traction for him?"

We challenged our marketing teams with the proposition that there is a difference between a "DJ" and David Guetta. David is more like a P. Diddy than he is like any other DJ in the world. He is an entrepreneur with clubs, products, compilations, brands and a spectacular team around him. Also, the French and global marketing teams made it critical that we provide David's audience with unprecedented online access. This varied from 24-hour day-in-the-life access to webcast parties to in-studio footage.

Each time he reached out, the fans spoke and we listened. His growing fan base is actually collaborating with EMI on the way we deliver Guetta to market.

EMI acts like Bebe, Bunbury and Jaguares have 23 nominations for the 2009 Latin Grammy Awards, up from eight in 2008. Is this due to your reorganization of EMI Music Latin America?

There is a momentum in the Latin space that feels more unified and focused than ever. New signings like Panda, Anahi and continued successes like Zoe, Jaguares and Aleks Syntek speak volumes about where we've been and where we're going. We moved the Latin operation from Miami to Los Angeles because so much of the Latin industry is based in Southern California. With [COO/ senior VP of new music—international/global artist management] Camilo Kejner—who works closely with me and [Capitol Latin senior VP] Diana Rodriguez—chairing the Latin priorities board, and the fact that I can participate in a Spanish-only board call, we are seeing a healthy roster get healthier.

You also signed a licensing deal with the Mexican label Movic. What are your plans for that?

The Movic team has an amazing roster: Panda, Los Claxons, Insite and Nina Pilots are all unique, talented artists. We are augmenting what they do with a full slate of services—marketing, promo, publicity, digital distribution, as well as licensing, merch and synch support. Panda's No. 1 debut in Mexico [with its "Poetics" album] speaks volumes about the potential for our partnership, and I'm looking forward to the development of other key artists on their roster.

Traditionally, EMI has relied upon the strength of its U.K. repertoire for international success. Does that mean unearthing international stars with cross-border potential is one of your main tasks?

I found that EMI's local strike rate was really strong. Even when there wasn't the level of U.S./U.K. releases from Coldplay, Katy Perry, Depeche Mode or Robbie Williams, local territories maintained focus on building their own stars.

We put in place a gold mine initiative where our new-music division can champion acts on a more local-to-local basis. In the past, the tendency was to centralize more. Now territories can communicate directly without any presidential stamp of approval.

This is currently happening with [the soul singer] Sabrina Starke, signed to EMI Netherlands and already released in Brazil, Belgium, Germany, Italy and India. It is also starting with [EMI France-signed rootsy singer] Hindi Zahra. This liberates creative executives who can be more entrepreneurial.

Why do record companies sign more non-U.S./U.K. acts that sing in English nowadays?

There is definitely a growth of English-singing acts, but this is not a record-company strategy. It might be a trend [among artists]. It is naïve to assume that the only English-language repertoire of value is from the U.S. and U.K.—for EMI, artists like Roxette, Marit Larsen and Lykke Li speak to that. But acts singing in their own language can still make it; it all depends on their aspirations. Look at [the Swiss rock artist] Gölä, singing in his [Bernese German] dialect. His fans are dying for him.

Does being an established writer help you interact with artists?

I have been told many times by artists how they appreciate my ability to go into shorthand when it comes to music, but also when it come to understanding the process and the psychology that goes with it. Record companies often avoid real creative conversations/challenges with artists, and this is where it can go wrong.

Key acts have left EMI in the past—not just in the United Kingdom, but also territories you oversee, such as France. Do you feel that EMI needs an image change?

EMI has an extraordinary history, but nothing speaks like success. We have 23 nominations at the Latin Grammy Awards, 22 at the [Australian Recording Industry Assn. Awards]. This says a lot to the artists' community about EMI's identity as a music company.

EMI cut back its operations in some territories and said it would be less likely to pay big advances. Does this affect your ability to attract artists?

We are doing the same thing everyone is doing in the current market, but we don't lose our ability to offer the resources and the skills to deal with who the artists actually are. Hindi Zahra was a very competitive signing.

How much do you rely on internet users for your A&R policy?

While the core of A&R will remain the same—great songs, artists you believe in, relationships—the skill set is changing. Just as there are a lot more choices for consumers online, there are a lot more artists to choose from for labels, if they can free themselves of the "bring it to me" attitude.

While I love people saying how great someone's ears are, actually I don't think a 40-year-old father of three like me can "out-listen" a 16-year-old girl from Fort Wayne, Cologne, Uppsala, Milan or Minsk. I can maybe out-market her, but A&R has to enhance its listening skill to more than the music—actually listening to the people who matter, the consumers and the outlets.

I've had hits even after some "golden ears" have rejected the same song as a dud. Who's right? The one guy in my job or the millions of people who disagreed and bought it? ••••

WITH NEW CO-WRITERS AND CONFIDENCE FROM TWO MULTIPLATINUM ALBUMS, CARRIE UNDERWOOD GETS PERSONAL WITH 'PLAY ON'

BY DEBORAH EVANS PRICE

PHOTOGRAPH BY MATTHEW ROLSTON

Carrie Underwood just spent several hours sitting in Audio Productions —a Music Row radio and TV production facility— doing interviews with radio stations across the country, but she looks fresh and relaxed as she prepares for her final chat of the day. She talks with the engineer about how excited she is to hear Miranda Lambert's new CD, "Revolution." And when someone offers to give her a copy, Underwood sweetly protests, "Oh, no, I'm going to buy it."

It's that combination of girl-next-door charm and a killer set of pipes that has made Underwood the most successful artist to come out of "American Idol" in any genre. Since winning the fourth season of the Fox competition, Underwood has released two albums, the 2005 "Some Hearts," which has sold 6.8 million, according to Nielsen SoundScan, and the 2007 "Carnival Ride," which has sold 2.9 million. She's won four Grammy Awards and numerous other accolades including three Country Music Assn. (CMA) female vocalist titles and three Academy of Country Music female vocalist honors. Last spring, she took home the ACM's entertainer of the year award, becoming only the seventh woman in the show's 42-year history to earn that accolade.

With such impressive accomplishments just four years into her career, one might expect Underwood to feel a little pressure before the Nov. 3 release of her new Arista Nashville album, "Play On." Instead, she radiates a quiet confidence.

"I feel like the second album had the most pressure for me," she says, acknowledging that she felt the first one had a shot at succeeding because of her built-in "Idol" audience. Then it exceeded expectations. "It kept going and kept going and kept going and the next thing it was like triple-platinum and quadruple-platinum and five-times-platinum and it was like 'Oh, my gosh!' "

Looking svelte in a black sweat shirt dress with a red belt, red bracelet and red Marc Jacobs flats, 26-year-old Underwood is the epitome of casual chic—but don't mistake laid-back for unambitious.

"I want to be somebody in the music business, not just somebody that [people say], 'Oh, yeah, five years ago she won that. Where did she go?' So making ["Carnival Ride"] was pretty stressful, but on this one I feel like I'm home," she says. "I'm in the music business. When people mention names like Kenny Chesney and Keith Urban and Brad Paisley, sometimes my name is in there too."

Sony Music Nashville chairman Joe Galante feels Underwood's confidence has translated into a more personal body of work on "Play On."

"It already has scored a victory because it represents growth for her sonically, vocally and from a lyrical standpoint," he says, seated in a conference room at Sony Music Nashville's headquarters. "We had more fun on the last album with some of the things that she was writing. With this, there is a balance between the fun Carrie and also one that is revealing more about herself, her views about life." >>>

UP CLOSE AND PERSONAL

"Play On" features 13 tracks, seven of which were co-written by Underwood. "I'm not an easy person to get to know, and I feel like I keep a lot of myself closed off to the world," she says. "It's really nice to be able to scratch the surface and to be able to open myself up a little more."

In recording "Play On," Underwood once again worked with producer Mark Bright, who produced "Carnival Ride" and seven tracks on "Some Hearts." "Over the summer, we spent more time with arrangements, and Carrie experimented more than ever with vocal textures," Bright says. "What came out on the other side is extraordinary. I think we got it right."

Underwood says she trusts Bright and that makes recording a more comfortable process. "I've known him now for five years," she says. "I've worked with him on every album and I trust him and he trusts me. I'm comfortable with him now—whereas in the beginning it was like, 'Oh, my gosh. This guy is a big-time producer. What if I do bad?' I was really afraid to mess up. Now I'm not afraid to screw up. I can screw up royally when I'm in the studio and it's OK. I trust him."

In the past, Underwood co-wrote with a stable of Music Row tunesmiths including Hillary Lindsey and Luke Laird, who co-wrote "So Small" and "Last Name," and Brett James, who co-wrote "Jesus Take the Wheel" with Lindsey and Gordie Sampson. In writing for "Play On," she expanded her circle to collaborate with "American Idol" judge/BMI 2007 pop songwriter of the year Kara DioGuardi; Mike Elizondo, known for his work with Dr. Dre and Eminem; and Raine Maida, co-founder of the rock band Our Lady Peace, and his wife, Canadian singer Chantal Kreviazuk.

"I listen to all kinds of music, all genres," Underwood says. "Bringing somebody from a different world into my world to see what their influence can do in my writing style—it's a lot of fun."

These new collaborations don't mean that Underwood's about to switch genres—she's still a country girl at heart. "I'm promising right now it would never happen," she says.

Several of the songs on "Play On" are standouts: "Temporary Home" is a poignant ballad in which Underwood, a Christian, speaks of her belief that "life on this Earth is just passing through" and heaven is the final destination; and "Mama's Song" is a loving tribute to her mother. "I really am in a good place in my life and I think that does show," Underwood says.

"What Can I Say" features special guests Sons of Sylvia, a trio consisting of brothers Ashley, Austin and Adam Clark. The group won Fox's "The Next Great American Band" contest and are working on its Universal South Records debut. "The lead singer was actually my first fiddle player. I've known him for five years now," Underwood says of Ashley Clark. "When thinking of duet partners, you think of the common names—but I wanted someone that people would say, 'Who's that?' "

SINGLE-MINDED SUCCESS

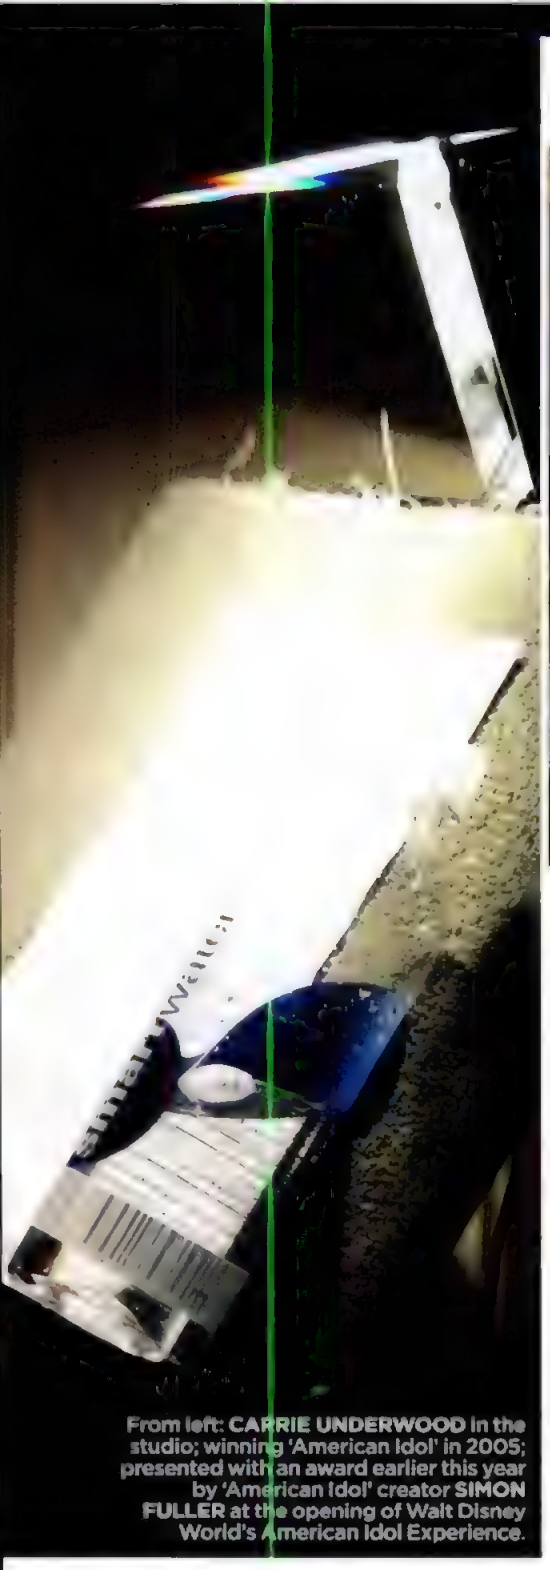
Judging by the success of the first single, "Cowboy Casanova," "Play On" looks sure to follow the platinum path of its predecessors. In its first week, "Casanova" sold 110,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. It's No. 6 on Billboard's Hot Country Songs chart. "An unfinished version leaked," Underwood says of the label rushing the finished version to radio. "It was really frustrating, but then it was exciting too. Radio stations were immediately putting it into heavy rotation and it was like, 'Oh, my gosh, this is good.' "

Galante says the track seemed like an obvious choice as the first single. "There's a number of great ballads on this album, but we had just come off of 'I Told You So' and 'Just a Dream' and really wanted to say, 'I'm back and this is different,' " he says. "It just gives her a fresh attitude."

Galante attributes much of Underwood's success to her multigenerational appeal. "Carrie goes from cradle to grave," he says of her fans. "She has positioned herself as somebody that cares about this format deeply. She is a country artist. She's made it very plain."

In the past four years, Underwood has dominated country radio with such No. 1 hits as "Jesus Take the Wheel," "Before He Cheats," "Wasted," "All-American Girl," "So Small" and "Just a Dream." Galante speaks with obvious pride of how Underwood has handled success. "I think it all hit her like a ton of bricks in the first couple of years and now this year has been easier," he says. "Carrie has grown up a lot considering she got dropped into this format on her head, not on her feet, and people were standing on the sidelines going, 'You're not really country, you're a TV show star.' I think she's impressed the heck out of people by her reverence for country music."

Underwood's manager Simon Fuller, chief executive of 19 Entertainment and creator of the "Idol" franchise, has high expectations for "Play On." "I think we'll exceed the success of the last album with this album," he says. "It's stronger in depth and there's more variety. The first single is just a complete smash."



'ORGANIZED STALKING'

Part of the efforts to alert Underwood's fans that there's a new album coming involved revamping her Web site, CarrieUnderwoodOfficial.com. "What we're trying to do with the Web site is give fans a place to go where they could participate with what's going on with Carrie, and that's why the site is set up to be more com munity-based," says Sony Music Nashville VP of digi tal business Heather McBee. "They can upload photos They can participate on the message boards and tal about the project."

One thing Underwood doesn't plan to use is Twitte "It just sounds like organized stalking to me," she says "I'll be in a restaurant and I'll get home and somebod tweeted and talked about what I ordered and what I wa wearing. In some cases that could be dangerous becaus you don't want everybody to know where you are in ever second of every day." (There's someone posing as Un derwood on Twitter, in the comments on her Web sit and on MySpace, and she warns fans that it isn't her.)

McBee says the label has planned special promo tions with iTunes to roll out new music from the album Starting Oct. 3, a track will be released each week ex clusively through the retailer, leading up to a "Com plete My Album" promotion when the full album i released Nov. 3. "People have already paid for thos first four tracks, so it's about getting them to buy int the album because obviously the album is the exper ence we want people to have," McBee says.

Paul Barnabee, senior VP of sales and operations a Sony Music Nashville, says retail is eagerly anticipat ing "Play On." "It's been amazing to see our retail part ners embrace this long-awaited release so passionately, he says. Underwood will participate in Wal-Mart' Soundcheck program, and Barnabee anticipates mor opportunities since Underwood and labelmate Bra Paisley will co-host the CMA Awards the week befor her album is released.

THE 'IDOL' ADVANTAGE

Even After Two Albums, Underwood's Win Still Resonates

Carrie Underwood is the best-selling artist to emerge from "American Idol"—and the experience gives her a distinct advantage over other acts.

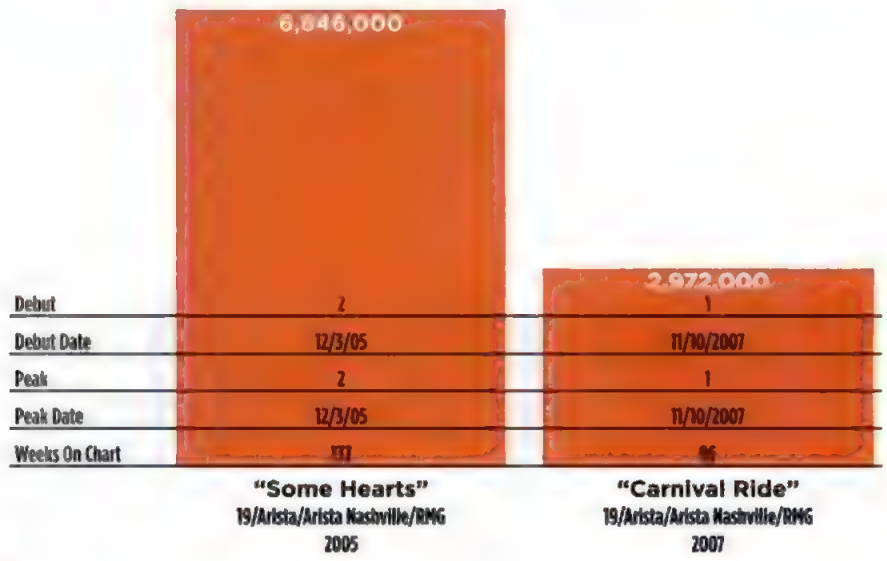
"I started out with a fan base," Underwood says. "Who starts their music career with a fan base already? Nobody. That's so wonderful. Every single day I hear, 'I voted for you.' "

Sony Music Nashville chairman Joe Galante says "Idol" provided Underwood with valuable training. "I'm really impressed with what they go through," he says. "It conditions them to a very pressurized environment. They are constantly working with people on arrangements, learning new things about music, really testing their skills. I remember [TV/video producer] Robert Deaton saying the first time Carrie did the [Country Music Assn.] Music Fest and she was given copy [to read], he showed it to her once and she went out there and nailed it. She was impeccable. We have people who have been in this format forever, and they can't read a teleprompter."

Though some alumni tire of talking about their "Idol" backgrounds and try to distance themselves from the show, Underwood says she'll always be appreciative. "I do credit the show for every single thing that I have," she says, "and as long as they want me to come back year to year and perform, I am so there." —DEP

Another opportunity that should help drive sales is Underwood's first TV special slated to air Dec. 7 on Fox, with guests including Paisley, Dolly Parton and David Cook. "It's a variety special featuring Carrie and that's something we've not done before," Fuller says. "As Carrie develops more as an artist we can do things like this. Carrie has potential to be an actress as well, so who knows what is coming in the next few years?"

Though plans are still in the works, Fuller wants to expose Underwood's music internationally. "We've got a shot at actually breaking out of America and having a run at a couple of other countries around the world," he says, adding that he plans to first focus on Australia, the United Kingdom and Germany. "The world needs to discover Carrie Underwood, so that's something exciting to come. Carrie always said that she'd love to take country music to the world and that would make her very proud."



For the immediate future, Underwood is just looking forward to co-hosting the CMA Awards and embarking on her new tour in 2010. "We'll go into rehearsals early next year, but it's going to be bigger. It's going to be awesome. We're pulling out all the stops," says Underwood, who was the top-ranked female country touring artist of 2008, according to Billboard Boxscore, grossing $27.1 million from 90 shows.

"I don't need to make any money, let's just do this," Underwood jokingly told her handlers about the tour. "Let's just step it up. I know everybody is going to say, 'Oh, my gosh. This cost what?' But, shoot, we can come back next year with an acoustic tour. This year let's just go for broke." ...

PRIME TIME FOR LATIN PROGRAMMING

A NEW WAVE OF SPANISH-LANGUAGE TV NETWORKS WANTS TO STEAL THE REMOTE

BY GAYLA BENEVENTO

NOT FAR FROM where Los Angeles' elite park their private planes, a battle of the bands was raging June 18—albeit in tightly timed TV intervals—underneath the giant dome at Santa Monica Airport's Barker Hangar. ✪ Sponsored by Wrigley and taped to air in cities nationwide on the Latino youth-oriented LATV network, the event featured a live audience, a panel of celebrity artist judges and a performance by Mexican chart-topper Camila. In keeping with the motto of Wrigley's 5 gum—"Stimulate your senses"—there was also an oxygen bar to sample the gum's flavors and a gyroscope ride in which audience members could be strapped in and whirled around astronaut-style in case they got bored. And there was a VIP lounge and a light show that accompanied the entrance of each competing band. ✪ The scene—witnessed by this reporter, who was also a judge of the contest—was a far cry from LATV's beginnings as a two-hour programming block on Southern California TV station KJLA. A 2002 Los Angeles Times story described it as having "the look of a television show taken over by a band of Latino college kids with an unruly enthusiasm for music and esoteric tastes," and "the edgy spontaneity of something that seems vaguely underground."

Sweet sounds: C MILA performs at t the Vive Tu Musica e th 5 Gum event at t nta Monica (Calif.) A Airport's Barker H Hangar.

Today, far from being a bilingual "Wayne's World," LATV is available in more than 40 million homes on basic digital cable and broadcast, according to the channel, thanks to a national rollout on local stations' digital channels that began in 2007.

LATV isn't the only upstart network targeting a Latino audience to grow its distribution in the last few years. Family-owned and publicly traded broadcast companies alike are carving out their share of Latino viewers with new channels. Many of those prominently feature Latin music as an integral part of their programming. As a host of emerging home-grown networks like LATV, Estrella TV and Mega TV pick up distribution—and as Mexico-based entertainment channels pursue stateside carriage—they open the field of promotional platforms for Latin artists on a national scale.

The newest Spanish-language TV channels are still just finding national audiences, so their full promotional potential may not be realized for a while. But they're growing with the goal of building multiple platforms around their programming and working with sponsors and distributors on innovative promo tions.

The broadcast behemoths Univision and Telemundo sti dominate the Spanish-language TV world. But a host of factor has made the national TV landscape for Latin artists decided more interesting, including the 2010 Census. The looming sur vey is projected to show Hispanics, already the nation's fastes growing and largest minority group, making up more than 16 of the U.S. population (up from 12.5% in the 2000 Census).

In addition, the transition to digital TV signals opens up sec ondary channels and gives broadcast affiliates entry to cabl systems. Competition by cable and satellite companies for thr Hispanic viewer are also driving opportunities, according t industry observers.

"If you look at the population that is not Hispanic, the num ber of channels they have at their disposal in English is enor mous," says Cynthia Hudson-Fernandez, chief creativ officer/executive VP for Spanish Broadcasting System (SBS and managing director of Mega TV. "There is a real window for providing a different type of programming opportunity to the Hispanic market."

The growth of opportunities for TV promotion can be a boon to developing acts, with airplay on most Spanish-language radio in the United States difficult for them to obtain. In addition to focusing programs around major stars when they're releasing new albums, the bilingual youth channels mun2 and MTV Tr3s regularly feature fresh faces (see story, page 26).

While those channels are built specifically around music, others with more general-interest programming also rely on music to drive ratings. Mega says its nightly variety show "Esta Noche Tu Night" came in first among adult Hispanics 25-54 in the Miami market Sept. 21 when it featured tropical star Olga Tañón.

GROWTH STRATEGY

SBS, which owns and/or operates 21 radio stations in the United States and Puerto Rico, got into TV with a local Miami station in 2006 and has since gained satellite, broadcast and cable carriage for its Mega TV in about 4 million homes, according to SBS, mostly in Florida and Puerto Rico. But Mega TV is looking west, and it recently picked up carriage on Las Vegas' Cox Cable and on Palm Springs, Calif.'s HDTV station, KLPS 19.2.

Another Spanish-language radio powerhouse, Los Angeles-based Liberman Broadcasting, has been aggressively building its new Estrella TV network, with its own TV stations and broadcast affiliates. Liberman owns and operates 22 radio stations and seven TV stations in top Hispanic markets, including Los Angeles and New York, and has affiliated with local stations in 18 markets. As of Oct. 1, that included Tribune Broadcasting's CW channel in New York, WPIX, which carries Estrella TV on its second channel, 11.2. Estrella TV says it's in 70% of U.S. Hispanic homes.

Liberman has been pursuing Estrella TV distribution in markets where the company has a radio presence, with the goal of filling in as many of the top 50 Hispanic markets as it can. At press time, Estrella TV was in 19 of the top 25 Hispanic markets.

A down economy may not seem like the ideal time to create a new TV network; advertising on Spanish-language TV was down nearly 13% for the first half of 2009 compared with the same period last year, according to TNS Media Intelligence. But Hudson-Fernandez says she expects Mega TV to break even in its third year of operation. Liberman Broadcasting COO Winner Horton says Estrella TV's affiliates "were ready to embrace Spanish-language broadcasting. It's not going to eat into their existing English-language audiences. It's a totally separate revenue stream."

WHAT HAVE YOU DONE FOR ME LATELY?

In the case of Mega TV and Estrella TV, they can leverage existing radio assets to promote their TV shows and use their radio programming clout to book artists on them. Other channels can feature artists and brands as part of a sponsor promotion or help the cable operator market itself through an artist sweepstakes.

In July, SBS unveiled Debut Digital, a multimedia promotional push in which Tañón debuted her new single on SBS radio stations, SBS' online portal Lamusica.com and Mega TV's "Lamusica.com Live" the same day. Tañón also held a press conference for international media that streamed live on the site.

According to SBS, the webcast drew more than 2,300 same-day viewers and 13,000-plus in the month since it aired, as well as more than 300 concurrent chat-room users. That was enough for SBS to plan on doing a minimum of six Debut Digital programs per year, Hudson-Fernandez says, and shop the concept to sponsors. The first try with Tañón "showed what we are capable of doing as far as providing that type of experience," Hudson-Fernandez says. "Because we're not saddled with a big bureaucracy, we're able to work that way."

Mega TV also has the ability to create original programming around artists, as it did with pop star Chayanne when it cast him as the lead in its "Gabriel" series last year. SBS premiered Chayanne's theme song for the show on its radio stations and offered it as a free download on Lamusica.com.

Estrella TV also has access to major artists through Liberman Broadcasting's influential radio programmers, who are heavily involved in booking artists on the channel. Pepe Garza, PD at Los Angeles' KBUE (La Que Buena), is known for breaking regional Mexican artists, including Jenni Rivera; his goal is to use Estrella TV as a way to create and monetize its own stable of stars, similar to the model Televisa has used to create pop acts like RBD.

Garza is a judge on "Tengo Talento, Mucho Talento," Estrella TV's new talent competition in which the winner gets $100,000 and help in landing a recording or management deal. The idea, Garza says, is to feature the winner or other new acts as on-air personalities and at Liberman's events. Garza eventually wants the broadcaster to own master recordings of artists that come up through its star system and sell them online.

"I don't know how long it'll take but it'll happen," Garza says. "We want to create stars . . . we're an engine for the music industry because we're looking for new artists."

Last year, Liberman aired KBUE's annual star-studded regional Mexican awards show live on its stations for the first time; this year, the live broadcast will be expanded to the slew of new Estrella TV affiliates.

Horton says that as the network expands east, "we'll continue with the regional acts but you'll see more pop acts." In

BORDER CROSSINGS

As Interest In Spanish-Language Programming Grows, Mexican Entertainment Channels Stake Their Claim In The U.S.

In addition to the fledgling U.S.-based networks, established Mexican channels with strong musical content have been steadily signing carriage deals north of the border. Grupo Multimedios, a media conglomerate with radio, TV, print and live venue properties in Mexico, launched its TeleRitmo regional Mexican music video channel and general-entertainment Multimedios TV on U.S. cable systems a year ago, beginning in Texas. The channels have spread to the San Francisco Bay area, the Pacific Northwest and Chicago and can now be seen in about 1 million homes, according to their U.S. distribution rep.

Mauricio Alatorre González, production and programming director for TeleRitmo and Multimedios TV, says U.S. audiences influence what artists get featured. "Artists like Selena, Intocable and Pesado are obviously big in our programming," says Alatorre, referring to the Texas-based musical icons. Alatorre also wants to break acts that come up through Multimedios' two Monterrey, Mexico, performance venues, La Fe Hall and El Volcán. "It's a complete system of promotion," he says.

Multimedios TV and TeleRitmo were part of Comcast's launch of 13 new Spanish-language channels in the San Francisco Bay Area in August, as was TuTV, a joint venture between the Mexican broadcasting giant Televisa and U.S.-based Univision. TuTV's viewership is still small, with about 2 million total homes, according to TuTV, which Comcast picked up for national distribution.

TuTV includes Latin music-based Ritmoson Latino and the pop-culture-heavy Telehit, but its most popular offering in the United States is Bandamax, which focuses on regional Mexican music. "It cuts across a lot of demos," TuTV president Chris Fager says.

Being carried in a market provides TuTV the opportunity to promote itself locally around concerts, offering ticket sweepstakes through direct mail and print ads in local Spanish-language newspapers. A four-week promotion of an Alejandro Fernández concert at Los Angeles' Gibson Amphitheatre last year was accompanied by an on-site booth inviting concertgoers to sign up for Time Warner Cable's new Spanish-language package.

Live Nation VP of special markets Emily Simonitsch says it's hard to track whether a ticket sale came from a promotion by a niche channel. But "it does help," she says, adding that it's become more common for those outlets "to take part in a show and offer their viewers some of the same opportunities we give to radio stations."

Family-run, Mexico-based regional Mexican video channel Video Rola, which entered the U.S. market in 2001, regularly broadcasts events and artist interviews from the States back to Mexico and Central America. The channel held a sweepstakes in April to promote Time Warner Cable's video-on-demand service in Southern California, in which the channel gave away a dinner date with Fonovisa star Fidel Rueda. The giveaway was advertised through direct mail, TV and radio spots, and automated calls to customers. Video Rola's next promotion with the cable company likely will involve artists signing autographs before a Chivas USA soccer match at Los Angeles' Home Depot Center.

"There is no talent fee associated with it," says Time Warner Cable of Southern California Hispanic marketing director Marlyn Garcia, "but it's a mutually beneficial marketing campaign for the cable operator, the network and the talent." —ABY addition, the company will unveil a new Web site in the fourth quarter on which full episodes of its shows can be streamed online.

LATV doesn't own radio stations, but its distribution has grown to the point where it can attract more commitments from sponsors like Wrigley. For the Vive Tu Musica With 5 campaign, "they didn't just buy 30-second spots," LATV president Daniel Crowe says, "they used us as a media partner and they worked with us to execute this national promotion wherein they promoted through Internet and TV to a national audience. That wouldn't have happened when we were a regional network only in Southern California."

In the end, Los Angeles-based Vinyl Soul won the battle of the bands, national exposure and 32 hours of recording studio time. But perhaps more to the point, Camila's performance that night was a paid gig, not merely promotional.

Crowe says only Warner Bros. made an upfront advertising commitment in LATV's first year of selling nationally, for 2007-08. "Our second year we had 14 upfront advertisers," he says. In another shift for the previously more bilingual channel, "We are clearly shifting more to Spanish-dominant programming because that's been performing better . . . we find it easier to compete in the Spanish-language world than in the English-language world."

In October, LATV will debut two new artist promotional campaigns, which are similar to MTV's "52/52" bumper program. LATV will produce a weekly 30-second promo that will air about 50 times per week, showing excerpts from an established act's video with some explanatory narration and an invitation to visit LATV's Web site, which will feature concert dates and possibly links to purchase songs from the artist. The network will do similar promos for unknown bands.

Even though music forms a strong programming foundation, "our long-term plan is to be more of a general entertainment channel with a variety of program types and to reach the same number of homes as Univision and Telemundo do," LATV's Crowe says. "We want to go beyond being a niche-type channel." ••••

Latin Acts Have More TV Opportunities Than Ever—But Sometimes It's About Who You Know As Much As What You Know BY AYALA BEN-YEHUDA

ESTRELLA TV

Estrella TV goes to 8.7 million Hispanic homes in 24 markets, including 19 of the top 25 Hispanic markets, according to the network. Parent company Liberman Broadcasting's influential radio programmer Pepe Garza books higher-profile musical guests on the company's TV shows "Estudio 2" and "A Que No Puedes." Contact Vanessa Diaz in programming at vdiaz@lbimedia.com.

LATV

The entertainment channel is incorporating more film, series and talk shows in its lineup, though it frequently hosts in-studio musical performances. Music videos make up 15%-20% of programming, with a focus on pop and rock and some English-language and developing acts, says executive director of programming and production Eduardo Marrón. The Los Angeles-based talent coordinator is Enrique Piñerua (epinerua@latv.com). LATV also co-produces some of its shows with Mexico City-based Multivisión.

MEGA TV

Given Mega TV's strong tie-in with parent company Spanish Broadcasting System's radio properties, key contacts for participation in the Debut Digital program are executive VP of programming Polito Vega and assistant VP of programming Marilyn Santiago. René Solorio, editorial director for SBS' Internet portal LaMusica.com, and SBS marketing and communications director Isabel Bucaram-Montana also are gatekeepers. Start with Bucaram-Montana at imontana@sbscorporate.com.

Good to know: Spanish Broadcasting System executive VP of programming POLITO VEGA (left) and mun2 programming VP FLAVIO MORALES

BANDAMAX

The regional Mexican music and lifestyle channel's executive producer Victor Manuel Moreno Valadez says he follows what's hot on the radio charts. But new acts can get in through "Con Alma Grupera," in which developing artists' videos face off weekly. (Televisa charges an entry fee—about $1,100—to get into the competition, Moreno says.) Contact Gina Pedroza in the new business department at gpedroza@televisa.com.mx.

TELERITMO/MULTIMEDIOS TV

TeleRitmo's regional Mexican videos reflect the channel's home in the northern Mexican hub of Monterrey, says Mauricio Alatorre González, director of production and programming. The channel programs a blend of Tex-Mex, banda, norteño, tierra caliente and other subgenres. Multimedios TV's programming includes music and variety shows as well as "Gruperísmo," a regional Mexican performance-based show. The channels work closely with Multimedios' live venues on talent booking. Contact Alatorre at mauricio.alatorre@multimedios.com.

KSAT

ABC's San Antonio affiliate, whose signal also reaches Texas Corpus Christi and Laredo, began airing back-to-back Latin music shows on Saturday nights—"Tejano y Más" and "Zonido"—about a year-and-a-half ago. The latter covers a mix of local Latin and non-Latin artists as well as internationally known Latin acts. Both shows are in English. "For a market like San Antonio, which is 60% Latino and English-dominant, it's working really well," producer Christian Storandt says. "We compete in this market against the 'CSI' shows and 'Saturday Night Live.' We don't win every week but we take turns." Storandt can be reached at christian@13thfloor.tv.

A TODA MUSICA TV

The new Los Angeles-based channel devoted to regional Mexican music videos and concerts launched on DirecTV Mas in August. Its founders are Latin music industry veterans Martin Fabian and Guillermo Santiso. Contact Tomas Rubio, VP of programming and executive producer, at trubio@sbcglobal.net.

VIDEO ROLA

The regional Mexican music video pioneer entered the U.S. market in 2001. Heavy on video blocks, the channel says it's in 2.7 million homes. The programming contact is Samuel Yañez at sammy@videorola.com.

Bilingual entertainment channels mun2 and MTV Tr3s are further along in their distribution and marketing goals than some of their Spanish-language counterparts, having grown with the support of media conglomerates NBC Universal and MTV Networks. Si TV, another Latin entertainment channel, broadcasts mainly in English, but mun2 and MTV Tr3s are bilingual in their programming and advertising. With their focus on youth, they compete with everything from Univision's cable channel Telefutura to Comedy Central or the CW. MTV Tr3s and mun2 have been key in creating awareness of acts like Calle 13 that appeal to young people yet don't fit neatly into a radio format; more conventional Latin artists have also taken advantage of the generous screen time to create a base of awareness around a new release.

Emerging networks "can provide a good filter to see if something can stick," says mun2 programming VP Flavio Morales. In the early days, labels "treated [us] as them doing us a favor. Now they see us as a strategic partner."

MUN2

Telemundo's bilingual youth-targeted entertainment channel is distributed on cable and satellite in 32.4 million homes, according to Nielsen. Mun2 had the biggest percentage gain in households carrying the channel year over year between April 2008 and April 2009 among all cable networks, according to SNL Kagan. Morales says the channel's video mix is about 60%-40% Spanish/English, with 15% of the videos fitting into the regional Mexican genre. To compete with what's on English- and Spanish-language TV, prime time on mun2 tends to consist of English-language wrestling, Spanish-language telenovelas and videos, with fewer of the channel's bilingual productions on during that time. For talent booking, contact Sara Kantathavorn, director of talent and artist relations, at sara.kantathavorn@nbcuni.com. To pitch videos, contact manager of music scheduling Roberto Isaac at roberto.isaac@nbcuni.com.

MTV TR3S

MTV's U.S. Latin channel is on broadcast, satellite and cable in nearly 38 million homes, according to Nielsen. Jesus Lara, senior VP of music and talent/artist relations at MTV Tr3s and MTV/VH1 Latin America, uses MTV's pan-regional reach to "see what's bubbling under in other countries in Latin America before other media outlets do. Sometimes we can take a risk on a certain thing that we think is working in Mexico or in Colombia." MTV Tr3s promotes developing acts on its "Descubre y Download" program, which offers free downloads, wallpapers and on-air promos. "It's not a requirement that they be signed, as long as they have a plan in place" for U.S. marketing and promotion, Lara says. Initial contact for bookings and video servicing is music and talent manager Henry Quintero, at henry.quintero@mtvstaff.com. ••••

TRANSATLANTICISM

David Bisbal Attempts World Domination

Spanish singer David Bisbal has the boisterous exuberance of a puppy and his trademark curls literally bounce with enthusiasm as he bounds into his label's offices to discuss his new album.

"Did you hear it? What did you think?" he asks, not anxiously, but excitedly, willing you to have loved every second of an album that mixes romantic ballads with uptempo, danceable pop and, always, the authentic Spanish rhythms and inflections that are his trademark.

Slated for release Oct. 20 on Universal Music Latino, Bisbal's fourth studio set, "Sin Mirar Atrás," will be released in Spain, Latin America and the United States simultaneously, in keeping with Universal's plan to continue developing Bisbal as an international star beyond Latin music. The album will then be released in Europe and other territories next spring.

Not content with merely having a trans-Atlantic debut, Bisbal will hold release events in three countries—his native Spain, the United States and Mexico—within 24 hours, holding an initial press conference in Madrid, then traveling to Cancún with media and fans onboard a private plane and finally traveling the following morning to Miami, where he'll host another press conference and give an acoustic performance.

The intensity of the promotion is typical for Bisbal, whose work ethic, dynamic stage presence and entrenched star appeal in his native Spain and, increasingly, overseas, have made him a priority for Universal. Beyond being his label, the company's artist development arm, Global Talent Services (GTS), has signed him as the first artist it's managing in full, including touring.

Jesús López, chairman of Universal Music Latin America/Iberian Peninsula, who oversees all of Universal's Latin operations worldwide, says Bisbal's deal "is a new approach to the business and one with which we'll test the market."

Bisbal came to Universal from Vale Music, the indie that signed him when he was a finalist in the 2000 inaugural version of "Operación Triunfo," the Spanish music reality show that launched Bisbal as a superstar in Spain. Vale had a licensing deal with Universal, which distributed the product in Spain and released Bisbal overseas, including the United States and Latin America. When Universal purchased Vale in 2006, Bisbal became a full-fledged Universal signing.

Frequent flier: DAVID BISBAL

The relationship is now expanding, with Universal overseeing and handling all aspects of Bisbal's career worldwide.

While Bisbal's stance on sharing management duties with his label may sound like anathema to some acts, it's a situation that, while still rare, is gaining ground in the Latin realm. Sony Latin, for example, handles several of its acts through Day 1/Westwood Entertainment, its artist development arm.

In GTS' case, the company was created to provide management and development support for select acts, particularly those with pan-regional scope. Earlier this year, GTS extended its relationship with Bisbal, taking over all management and touring functions.

Bisbal's touring power and potential—he plays an average of 100 shows per year across three continents—was a factor in GTS' decision to sign him. Indeed, the launch of "Sin Mirar Atrás" has been set up with major live promotional performances in Spain (where he sang for an estimated half a million people during a performance lobbying for the Olympics), the United States and Mexico, which will help set up his tour in 2010.

In addition, Bisbal has already been promoted in non-Spanish-speaking markets, including Germany, Switzerland and Austria. Last year, he paired with Rihanna for a video and a bilingual version of her song "Hate That I Love You," which was released as a stand-alone single. This time, "Sin Mirar Atrás" includes a bilingual track, "Sufrirás," with British newcomer Pixie Lott.

"There is a lot of interest in Europe for Latin music," says Bisbal, who's acutely aware of the downturn in music sales. "There's a growing number of stations and channels, and that's a wonderful thing."

While "Sufrirás" may further open the door for Bisbal in non-Latin markets, in the United States and Latin America Universal is working the single "Esclavo de Tus Besos," which is No. 2 on Billboard's Hot Latin Songs chart.

The track launched with a massive four-week national promotion with the Univision Radio network that included a live show in Los Angeles for Univision listeners and ads that aired on radio and TV stations in 16 markets. In addition, says Universal Music Latino GM Luis Estrada, Bisbal will be the image of a Univision TV spot campaign promoting its radio stations in key markets—Los Angeles, Miami and Puerto Rico. The spots will kick off the week of the album's release and run three to four times per day for one to three months.

"It's the first time a David Bisbal album is treated with the same importance in the U.S. as in Spain," says Universal Music Latino president Walter Kolm. "He is definitely an international act with potential in multiple countries." ••••

>>>WYCLEF'S HIP-HOP RETURN
Wyclef Jean is set to return to hip-hop with the release of "From the Hut to the Projects to the Mansion." The 13-track EP, featuring all-new material produced by DJ Drama, is due Nov. 10 on Carnival House through Megaforce/Sony Music. The set features guest spots from Eve, Timbaland, Maino and Cyndi Lauper, among others. The songs tell the story of Toussaint St. Jean, a character loosely based on the 18th-century Haitian revolutionary hero Toussaint L'Ouverture.

>>>'LOVE' CLIMBS TO NO. 1 IN U.K.
Barbra Streisand's "Love Is the Answer" (Columbia/Sony Music Entertainment) climbed 4-1 on the U.K. albums chart, becoming her sixth chart-topper on the tally but her first No. 1 studio album since 1980. Streisand last led the U.K. albums market in 2002, when "The Essential Barbra Streisand" was No. 1. The vocalist has only once before topped the list with a studio release, when "Guilty" was No. 1 for two weeks in 1980. The new set was propelled to the top with the help of her appearance on a special edition of BBC 1's "Friday Night With Jonathan Ross" Oct. 2. It sold 27,000 copies last week, according to Official Charts Co. data.

>>>'THIS IS IT' HITS THE AIRWAVES
Michael Jackson's new single "This Is It" began streaming online and airing on the radio Oct. 12, nearly four months after the King of Pop died of a prescription drug overdose at age 50. The track, which features backing vocals by Jackson's brothers, opens with a soft, soulful introduction and the lines, "This is it, here I stand/I'm the light of the world, I feel grand." It will be available for purchase as part of the two-disc album "This Is It," which is due Oct. 26 internationally and Oct. 27 in North America to coincide with the Oct. 28 global release of Jackson's movie of the same name.

OUT OF THE VALLEY

Welsh Sensation Katherine Jenkins Eyes Global Success

In the United Kingdom, if a sentence contains the words "classical music" along with "first" or "biggest," chances are it'll have Katherine Jenkins' name in it, too.

The Welsh soprano was working as a teacher when she signed her first deal with Universal Classics in 2002, but she has since rewritten the rule book on classical crossover with a string of achievements, including becoming the first female artist to win two consecutive Classical BRIT Awards (for album of the year in 2005 and 2006).

Now, after career album sales of more than 2.3 million copies in the United Kingdom, according to the Official Charts Co., Jenkins has her eye on international success with the release of her seventh album, "Believe," Oct. 26. In an effort to grow on the world stage, she has secured new management and signed a new, multirights deal with Warner Music Entertainment.

The WME contract covers three albums plus a special, as-yet-unannounced multimedia project and encompasses recorded music, video, TV material (including Jenkins' TV hosting work), merchandise, brand sponsorship, advertising and special live performances. Regular touring isn't part of the deal. WME president Conrad Withey calls the agreement the label's "biggest-ever U.K. classical deal."

Jenkins says she signed with WME because "they can take me to the next level and really make me a global artist." In August, she also split with manager Brian Lane—managing director of London-based Bandana Management, who brokered the WME deal—in favor of a worldwide deal with Terry McBride's Vancouver-based Nettwerk Management. She declines to comment on the split, but Nettwerk's international profile is likely to assist her bid for global domination. So far, her main international success has come in Australasia, where her third album, "Living a Dream," went top 20 in Australia and New Zealand, but Warner plans a global push for "Believe," with releases scheduled for Australia in December, France in January and the United States in the spring.

"Katherine is an important prospect for us internationally, and that's why we have decided to give different territories freedom with release dates," says Matthieu Lauriot-Prevost, senior VP of international marketing at Warner Music International. "Katherine is the best person to sell Katherine."

Musically, her new album marks a move to a poppier sound. Produced by David Foster (Michael Bublé, Josh Groban), it features a cover of Sarah McLachlan's "Angel" and a dazzling, operatic version of Evanescence's "Bring Me to Life," as well as her traditional arias.

"David Foster calls it 'growth without alienation,' " she says with a smile. "I am broadening my range but staying true to my audience. I can guarantee you I won't ever be doing a pure pop record though. There are other people who can do that kind of thing better than me."

Jenkins kicks off an 11-date U.K. arena tour booked by the Agency Group March 3, 2010, at Birmingham National Indoor Arena and plans dates in Germany, Japan and the United States before the U.K. summer classical festival season.

Her regular promotional appearances have made Jenkins a prime-time and daytime TV favorite in the United Kingdom—she has already appeared on BBC 1's "Strictly Come Dancing" and "The Andrew Marr Show" during the current campaign—and her U.S. label, Reprise Records, hopes similar tactics will boost her popularity stateside.

"We're still in the introduction process," says Reprise president Diarmuid Quinn, also COO of Warner Bros. Records. "She's not done much here and we hope to raise her profile by getting her known on TV first."

The introduction process will be gradual; Jenkins will start her U.S. campaign with an appearance on Andrea Bocelli's PBS Christmas special. She also duets with Bocelli on the album track "I Believe."

WME and Nettwerk plan to boost Jenkins' merch sales and expand her branding business; she's already a "brand ambassador" for the accessories firm Montblanc. Her new official Web site (kj.tv) has launched a Diamond Club section, where fans can pay £20 ($32) for six months' access to exclusive content and special offers.

"At the moment her demographic is really 45 upwards," says London-based Nettwerk artist manager Tara Joseph. "We want to go 9-90."

Jenkins says she's ready to make the final step on the journey from Welsh teacher to worldwide superstar.

"I have made what I hope is a global album but one which I feel I own every part of," she says. "I am definitely ready for the next phase." ...

Pitch Perfect

Opera Star Cecilia Bartoli Explores The Music Of The Castrati

Cecilia Bartoli could have followed the path of least resistance. When the Italian mezzo-soprano burst onto the opera scene in the early '90s with a mostly standard repertoire of Rossini and Mozart, she looked like she could establish a career as a traditional classical artist. Her 1992 album, "If You Love Me," has sold 190,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan; a later effort, the 1999 "Vivaldi Album," sold 75,000 copies.

It would have been easy for her to simply release more mainstream efforts and watch the money roll in. But as her fame grew, so did her appetite for more adventurous work. And while none of her more recent albums have sold as many copies as her earlier projects, Bartoli says she's grateful to have the opportunity to bring lesser-known music to light. Her 2005 album, "Opera Proibita," unearthed music that was outlawed in 18th-century Rome because of papal censorship, while the 2006 "Maria" explored the work of early-19th-century singer Maria Malibran and featured eight world-premiere recordings. Bartoli's latest research project/release, out Oct. 27, is "Sacrificium" (Decca), a deep dive into the cruel world of the castrati—18th-century male singers castrated as boys to maintain the high tones of their voices.

"I have always sung a lot of music which Mozart wrote for the castrati," Bartoli says. "But when I devoted a project ["Opera Proibita"] to my hometown, Rome, I for the first time read more about the strange and sad facts that lie beneath the castrato phenomenon. I noticed that many people know music that was written for castratos, but do not know about the tragedy behind it. I think it is most important to talk about this, because it deepens our understanding for this music and it helps me as an interpreter."

In addition to the music, the two-CD set includes deluxe packaging: a hardback book that comes standard (there won't be a jewel case release) and a thick 152-page booklet that includes a libretto and the "Castrato Compendium," an A-Z guide to the era assembled by Bartoli that also features an essay she wrote.

It's a heavy undertaking for an artist and a label but Decca is steadfast in its support. "Cecilia Bartoli is not a typical classical artist, nor does she create typical classical releases," marketing manager Joseph Oerke says. "With her, more than any other artist, the customer gets not only the music but also a completely researched project and supplemental materials. Though we recognize that this is a trying time for the industry, such is the name Bartoli has built for herself, the quality of her work and Decca's unwavering confidence in her that we believe this packaging to be not only deluxe but essential to the project." ...

Dear Kenny,

When you walked out onstage eight years ago as a hard-ticket-selling headliner, who knew you'd end up being the only guy who's sold over a million tickets each of the past 8 years?

You've played 40 major stadiums over the past 5 years - 12 of them this year alone!

6 QUESTIONS

with JAY FARRAR

by EVIE NAGY

Best-known for leading the alt-country rock bands Uncle Tupelo and Son Volt, Jay Farrar teamed with Death Cab for Cutie's Ben Gibbard for his latest project, an album with lyrics based on the prose from Jack Kerouac's 1962 novel "Big Sur" that's due Oct. 20 from F-Stop/Atlantic Records. The partnership began when the two artists were asked to contribute a few songs to the soundtrack to the upcoming documentary "One Fast Move or I'm Gone: Kerouac's Big Sur," about the time the writer spent in the Northern California town.

1 You had never met Ben Gibbard before working on the film. Why did the partnership click, and how did it turn into a full album?

Ben and I met the night before we started recording, and throughout the process I think it became apparent that we had a shared sensibility. Under the circumstances things could have easily not gone well, because we were basically getting to know each other in the studio as we were working, and sometimes there were cameras rolling in the studio as well, but it all turned out in the end. I think that both of us having gone through that experience resulted in a bond that you can't create any other way.

2 How has Kerouac's work and the themes in his writing influenced you throughout your career?

I've always been a follower of Kerouac's work. I got started when I was a teenager reading "On the Road," and I think that book gives voice and meaning to a wanderlust that exists in all of us. The quest for self-discovery is encapsulated in that book very well. "Big Sur" is almost kind of the bookend to that, even though it was written during a period in Jack's life where he's kind of looking back and taking stock. Probably the biggest influence from Kerouac that I've picked up over the years is his method of writing, the idea of getting all your first thoughts out there, more of a stream-of-consciousness style of writing, not worrying about structure or form.

3 What was the songwriting process like using Kerouac's words as your lyrics? Was it easier or in some ways harder to adapt than if you were putting your own ideas to music?

It was much easier for two reasons. The first being there was a familiarity with Kerouac's work just from having read so many of his books over the years. Also there was this kid being let loose in a candy store element to the project when I first started getting into the writing. Secondarily, because I was using Jack's lyrics, words and lines from the text of "Big Sur," I think it took away a degree of self-consciousness that's sometimes there when I'm writing my own stuff.

4 How important is it that people read the book and/or watch the film in order to get the most out of the music?

The fact that Atlantic is putting out an edition of the book along with the DVD and the record itself is great. It is a very complementary experience.

5 What are your touring plans to support the album and will shows include elements other than music, such as readings or film clips?

Ben and I talked about that, but I think because we're first and foremost musicians I think we're kind of falling back on the idea of just making it a rock show. The plan is to do a handful of shows near the end of this month concurrent with the release of the package.

6 What can you say about the reported Woody Guthrie project you're working on?

It actually won't be a continuation of "Mermaid Avenue" [as has been reported]. It's something that I started working on with [Woody's daughter] Nora Guthrie that's still in the works and if everything goes well, it could be ready for release sometime next year.

>>>TRUE FAITH

Currently appearing on cinema screens alongside Johnny Depp and the late Heath Ledger in Terry Gilliam's critically acclaimed "The Imaginarium of Doctor Parnassus"—which opens stateside Dec. 25—London-born actress/singer Paloma Faith is also proving a hit in the music business.

Faith's debut album, "Do You Want the Truth or Something Beautiful" (Epic/Sony), entered the United Kingdom's Official Charts Co. Oct. 10 at No. 14. Marrying upbeat R&B arrangements with jazzy soulful vocals—often compared to Amy Winehouse—the 10-track album was preceded by the U.K. top 20 singles "Stone Cold Sober" and "New York."

"There's lots of great songs on this album and lots of great opportunities," says Epic Records U.K. managing director Nick Raphael, who identifies women aged 16-40 as Faith's target demographic. "She spent two years writing this record and I think that shows. As we go forward, people will see the depth of the album."

Cosmetics firm Rimmel also used "Stone Cold Sober" in a global (except for North America) TV ad campaign this summer. The 24-year-old artist is published by Sally Isaac/Universal Music Publishing.

"Do You Want the Truth" will have a staggered European release throughout the fall backed by a U.K. and European tour, booked by London-based Creative Artists Agency, beginning Nov. 17. A third U.K. single is planned for early next year, coinciding with a second European tour. There aren't any U.S. plans at present.

>>>FLAMING JUNE

Damien Leith took a novel approach when writing his third studio album, "Remember June"—the Australian chart-topping Australian Recording Industry Assn. (ARIA) Award winner penned a parallel book of the same name.

"There are themes around the book which I couldn't disconnect," Leith says. "I'd finish writing a chapter in the book, then write a song."

Three years ago, the Irish-born singer/songwriter became the oldest winner (at the age of 30) of "Australian Idol." Four ARIA platinum (70,000 shipments) albums followed, but he says "Remember June," with themes tracing the highs and lows of life, is the "only one that really feels like a 'me' record."

"Remember June" arrived Oct. 9 at retail, supported by shows at Sydney's State Theatre (Oct. 16) and Melbourne's Thornbury Theatre (Oct. 17). The lead single, "To Get to You," issued Sept. 25, has already been used in a national promo campaign for homegrown TV series "Mercy."

Next on the agenda is breaking Leith overseas. "The intent with this record is certainly to get a release in the Irish market and bleed it into the English market," Leith's manager David Champion says. Leith is published by Universal Music Publishing Australia and booked by the Harbour Agency. Harper Collins is expected to publish "Remember June" early 2010.

>>>MILKING IT

Belgian dance duo Milk Inc's Oct. 9 completion of a sellout six-show run at Antwerp's 16,800-capacity Sportpaleis venue has confirmed its status as a major home-grown act.

Now the duo of Regi Penxten and Linda Mertens is eyeing other markets, with fall releases scheduled for Spain and France for their current album "Blackout" (ARS/Universal Music) and its title track.

The act launched in 1996 as a studio-only project of producers Penxten, Filip Vandueren and Ivo Donckers and scored its first major domestic hit single with the 1998 song "In My Eyes." A string of hit singles and albums followed, with the act's popularity undiminished by several lineup changes.

Milk Inc switched label from Antler Subway to ARS/Universal for its previous album, "Forever" (2008), which the act's manager says has sold 75,000 domestic copies. The act has a worldwide licensing deal with Universal Music; publishing is copyright control.

Before the release of "Blackout," the duo emphasized its crossover appeal by headlining Belgium's Rock Werchter festival (July 5). "Milk Inc has a very strong live reputation with the pop audience," says the act's manager/booking agent Michel Lenaerts. "[But] their appearance at Rock Werchter was the cherry on the cake."

Q&A BY ANN DONAHUE

Soul Survivor

After Delving Into 'The Great American Songbook,' Rod Stewart Returns To His First Love

Rod Stewart brings a splash of color to the staid surroundings of the Beverly Hills Hotel. He's wearing a blue striped shirt, a white business suitcoat with thick red trim and blue Converse slip-ons—a look that combines nautical and vaudeville, which seems perfectly fitting for Stewart, the perpetual showman.

After completing a 20-city North American tour earlier this year, Stewart returned to recording and made the album he says he's been waiting his entire life to create. "Soulbook," a collection of classic soul songs from the '60s and '70s, will come out Oct. 27 on J Records. It's a natural next step after recording standards for his four-album "Great American Songbook" series. Those four albums have sold nearly 9 million copies combined, according to Nielsen SoundScan, since the first was released in 2002, and the 2006 "Still the Same . . . Great Rock Classics of Our Time" sold 724,000. A "Songbook" boxed set has also sold 89,000 copies.

"Soulbook" features duets with Mary J. Blige (on "You Make Me Feel Brand New") and Jennifer Hudson (on "Let It Be Me") as well as two tracks featuring the original performers: "Tracks of My Tears" with Smokey Robinson and "My Cherie Amour" with Stevie Wonder. Al Schmitt, Sam Cooke's original producer and engineer, engineered the album.

"I couldn't keep putting it off," Stewart says. "I was very frightened of doing it, because as I say in the liner notes, these are the guys I looked up to and admired all my life. It was a big step."

Out of the many classics in this genre, how did you pick which songs to sing?

t was like the "Great American Songbook" albums]. We argued, shouted, pushed, ought and then came up with a good compromise. We tried to stay away from the ones hat are really often on the radio, like ("Sittin' On) The Dock of the Bay" and "When a Man Loves a Woman" and "I Heard It Through the Grapevine." I think we've come up with a good collection.

Did you choose any tracks based on what kind of vocal spin you could put on them?

As a vocalist, you never know what you're going to sing until you put the headphones on and the microphone is in front of you. I even surprised myself sometimes. On "Rainy Night in Georgia," I changed the melody a little bit but I didn't lose sight of the original. It's never preplanned—I guess that's why it's called "soul singing."

And you obviously have a personal connection to many of these songs.

think "Just My Imagination" has a connection with me because it was the same year as Maggie May" was a hit—1971—so that one its home.

It's great that Al Schmitt was involved. It makes it all come full circle.

've met Al before—he did some of the "American Songbook." But when I sit next to him t a desk, I feel like putting my arms around im because that's as near as I'll get to Sam Cooke. I never, obviously, met Sam Cooke, nd I never saw him live. I saw Otis [Redding] nce, I've seen James Brown, and I've seen ackie Wilson. It was fabulous seeing Otis erform—I had tears in my eyes. It's funny n those days, because it was called the Soul evue and they would come over in the late 60s and Otis would come on and sing 15-20 minutes maximum, and then Carla Thomas or 20 minutes max, and then Wilson Pickett would only do 20 minutes.

How important was it for you to change the arrangements of these songs?

In some of them, I said we have to change , or we wouldn't do it at all, but some of the ongs won't be changed. On "(Your Love eeps Lifting Me) Higher and Higher," that's et in stone. You can't do that another way. Or "What Becomes of the Broken Hearted." : won't work. For lack of a better word, they on't bend.

These songs were recorded in an era when today's technology wasn't available. Did that have any impact on your interpretation of them?

/e were trying to get the same drum sounds, ut we didn't want to go back and sound the ame because then there wouldn't be much oint to it. I think the record sounds very crisp.

What I will tell you, though, is that lots of ie vocals were done in my house in England, the bar, and my house here, in the library, nd in a hotel room in Florida. That's the great thing about now: You can record anywhere you want. It's just fabulous. It's so comfortable. If you feel like singing now, you go sing. It's the way to do it, because Alastair, my little son, will just wander in the studio, even though we've got [signs that say], "Keep out, Dad's recording"—he doesn't know, he just wanders in. The other kids wander in, my wife wanders in, and I'm singing away. It's just wonderful.

You were a mentor on "American Idol" a few years back. Do you have plans to do more TV appearances to promote this album?

I'll be doing "Dancing With the Stars" and its equivalent, "Strictly Come Dancing" [in the United Kingdom]. They reach a huge audience. The music business is dead when it comes to selling records; you've got to do everything you can possibly do to make people aware that you've got an album out.

You're known so much as a live performer. Are you looking forward to performing these songs in concert?

We actually have a band rehearsal at my house tomorrow. I'm really looking forward to it. It's up in the air right now, but we'll be touring next year for sure.

Will you incorporate some of your other music into the show, or will it be all soul, all the time?

Oh, I'll always have to do "Maggie May" and "Some Guys Have All the Luck" and "Tonight's the Night" and "Hot Legs." But I'll present this as its own little segment somewhere in the show. A soul revue, or something.

Talk a bit about your most recent tour.

We did a mini-tour of the U.S. of places I haven't been in three or four years: Dallas and Houston and Denver. I made a point of thanking everybody every night, because there's a recession on and the dollar is hard to come by. You look at the amount of dollars you got, and you think, "New ironing board? Or tickets to the Rod Stewart concert?"

Have you ever had any issues with stage fright?

I did one show with the Jeff Beck Group—the first show I ever did in America, in 1969 at the Fillmore East—when I hid behind the amps and sung because I was so scared. And Jeff said, "The singer's going to come out in a minute . . . and stand here." And I did, and all was forgiven.

I have a routine of warming up my voice. I wouldn't be able to sing the way I sing unless I warmed up. It's like running. A reoccurring dream for me is being placed in Madison Square Garden, and someone says, "Rod! Did you do your warm-up?" And no—and then not being able to sing.

Which do you prefer: touring or recording?

Give me touring any day. The spontaneity of it all, the element of risk every night, you never know what's going to happen. Keeps you lively, keeps you young. ••••

DEL THE FUNKY HOMOSAPIEN & TAME ONE

Parallel Uni-Verses Producer: Parallel Thought
Gold Dust
Release Date: Oct. 13

There aren't any chart-topping guests on the new release from Oakland, Calif., hip-hop pioneer Del the Funky Homosapien and New Jersey underground stalwart Tame One. "Parallel Uni-Verses" is a true East Coast/West Coast dual team-up; every track a shared effort of like minds and tight handoffs. The song "Gaining Ground" revisits Del's past with futuristic ambient grooves, while "Teddy" is a hot metallic mix of crackly funk horns and space-age effects. Some may hear tracks like "The Franchise" as sour grapes for other rappers' current commercial success, but the duo backs up its devotion to classic sounds with rich layers of funk, soul, jazz, blues and rock sampling that honor the genre-bending experimentation prevalent in '80s and early-'90s hip-hop. It's a blending that the pair calls out in the song "Flashback," with references to Herbie Hancock and Hall & Oates alike.—EN

POP

BACKSTREET BOYS

This Is Us
Jive Records
Producers: various
Release Date: Oct. 6

Years removed from their teen-pop prominence, Backstreet Boys continue to produce pleasurable hooks and hummable vocal harmonies on "This Is Us," the group's seventh studio album and second as a foursome. Working with longtime producer Max Martin as well as in-demand dance maestro RedOne, Backstreet Boys offer standard bubble-gum fare while also taking a few intriguing forays into throbbing electronica. While "She's a Dream" and "Bigger" are expertly produced love songs, tracks like "Bye Bye Love" combine slick R&B and vibrant beats into commanding dance music. In any style, A.J., Nick, Brian and Howie can still slay high notes and whisper come-ons with equal aplomb. Although the lyrics never reach too far, the foursome simmers because the album's production keeps up with the singers' harmonizing. "This Is Us" may be a steppingstone in ushering Backstreet Boys away from their days on pop radio and firmly through the club door.—JL

THE SWELL SEASON

Strict Joy
Producers: Glen Hansard, Peter Katis
Anti-
Release Date: Oct. 27

The Swell Season's Glen Hansard and Marketa Irglova gained notoriety two years ago after starring in and releasing the soundtrack to the Academy Award-winning film "Once." With the arrival of its second album, "Strictly Joy," the duo proves itself as much a real-life band as believable characters onscreen. The lyrics continue to center on relationships, providing a raw and emotionally charged narrative to songs that are sonically more integrated and refined than on the group's debut. The Van Morrison-inspired "Low Rising" layers swaying bass, punchy horns and Hansard's soulful vocals, while "The Rain" should sound familiar to fans of "Once," drawing on more restrained versions of cinematic strings and Hansard's fast-paced guitar strumming. The duo works better together than apart on the album, best-exemplified by the '60s folk harmonies of Hansard and Irglova on "Love That Conquers" and the uplifting "Feeling the Pull." "Strict Joy" maintains the relatability and sincerity that made the soundtrack to "Once" so compelling.—KS

BRIAN McKNIGHT

Evolution of a Man
Producer: Brian McKnight
E1 Music
Release Date: Oct. 27

Since his last album, the 2006 "Ten," Brian McKnight has been busy moonlighting as a morning show personality (on smooth jazz KTWV Los Angeles) as well as host of a self-titled syndicated urban radio program and a new late-night TV talk show ("The Brian McKnight Show"). The singer/songwriter returns to his original bread-and-butter gig for his 11th album, "Evolution of a Man," and his E1 Music debut. Now an elder statesman in the R&B and pop arenas, McKnight offers another mood-setting mix of midtempo cuts and ballads. In addition to the lead single, "What I've Been Waiting For," McKnight more than holds his own on the midtempo numbers "WhenURlovinME" and "AlwaysbeMYbaby," whose catchy hooks and lush harmonies linger long after the last notes have sounded. But ballads remain his strong suit, especially the moving "Another You." It's signature McKnight: just him on the keyboards singing passionate, heartfelt lyrics. One quibble: two distracting interstitials at the beginning and midway through the set. While not groundbreaking, "Evolution of a Man" shows McKnight still has a way with the ladies.—GM

GOSPEL

BEBE & CECE WINANS

Still
Producers: various
B&C Records/Malaco Music Group
Release Date: Oct. 6

Reuniting after 15 years, BeBe & CeCe Winans offer definitive proof that things do indeed get better with time. On "Still" (the first release under their own label), the gospel duo settles right back into the inspirational groove that powered its earlier R&B crossover hits, including "Lost Without You" and "Addictive Love." The pair's smooth yet arresting blend of R&B, pop, soul and jazz carries a contemporary vibe that subtly underscores faith-based lyrics about strength, hope and love that are the Winans' stock in trade, as are their pristine vocals. The album's title track doubles as a reintroduction, cleverly weaving the titles of the duo's hits into the lyrics. They also get down to business on standouts like the God-is-love-themed "Close to You," the joyous "Reason to Dance" and the reflective "Never Thought." After all this time, BeBe & CeCe Winans haven't lost their touch.—GM

ELECTRONIC

TIËSTO

Kaleidoscope
Producers: various Ultra Records
Release Date: Oct. 6

Only Timbaland could corral a guest list more impressive (or more eclectic) than the one on Dutch producer/DJ Tiësto's new studio album, "Kaleidoscope." Atop Tiësto's whooshing keyboards and pulsating beats, the new set features vocals from Nelly Furtado, Tegan & Sara, Bloc Party frontman Kele Okereke, Calvin Harris and Sigur Rós' Jónsi Birgisson, among others. Unlike Timbo, Tiësto isn't much of a songsmith—a lot of this is longer on groove than on tune, and it all hews pretty closely to one sonic template. The listener can't always tell why one track called for the folk-soul stylings of Priscilla Ahn ("I Am Strong"), for example, as opposed to Okereke's post-punk yelp ("It's Not the Things You Say"). Still, there's no denying the big-room throb of cuts like Furtado's "Who Wants to Be Alone" and "Knock You Out," with Met ric singer Emily Haines. An given the generally faceles nature of most trance a bums, "Kaleidoscope" repre sents a virtual avalanche c personality.—MW

LYLE LOVETT

Natural Forces
Producers: Lyle Lovett, Billy Williams
Curb/Lost Highway
Release Date: Oct. 20

Lyle Lovett's 12th album, "Natural Forces," should be hailed as an antidote to the absurd commercialism that permeates much of American popular music. That's not to say his previous albums were lacking in this—each stands as a testament to Lovett's peerless ability to seek out and illuminate the often hidden irony of the human condition. Considering that Lovett penned four of the songs on the new album (with the balance authored by such poets as Townes Van Zandt, David Ball, Don Sanders and Eric Taylor), one might expect a somewhat disjointed listening experience. But that's hardly the case, as Lovett deftly accomplishes the opposite and triumphs in taking the listener on a cohesive journey. "Whooping Crane" is clever wordplay devoted to the sometimes futile search for life's meaning, while "Loretta" is a man's wry concoction of a not-so-perfect imaginary lover. And the title track is a multi-act drama that zigzags between meandering individualism and social justice. From the blue double-entendre of the song "Farmer Brown/Chicken Reel" to the cautionary "It's Rock and Roll," "Natural Forces" satisfies from start to finish.—WJ

Babilla

Producer: Vico C
EMI Televisa

Release Date: Oct. 6

Four years after his last studio album, one of Latin urban music's truly original artists shines once again. Former drug addict and born-again Christian Vivo C has little use for the monotonous sexual content most associated with the reggaetón of his native Puerto Rico. While some of the rhythms on "Babilla" approach the genre, the intricate production and evocative lyrics tell more finely nuanced street stories. "Agua" is an emotional law memory of arrest and jail time, the anthemic "Polvora" recounts violence wrought by the drug trade, the club track "Angelina" is about a single mother, and "Prueba de Fe-nacia" is a bluesy rock duet with Gustavo Laureano. Whether it's his confident, nimble delivery or clever layering of piano and organ over drum machines, Vico C shows that the devil—or the ange— is in the details.—ABY

CHRIS BELL

I Am the Cosmos (Deluxe Edition)

Producer: Chris Bell
Rhino Handmade

Release Date: Sept. 28

"Children by the millions/Worship Alex Chilton," so goes the Replacements song, but only thousands know about Chris Bell, his bandmate in Big Star's first incarnation. Bell helped shape Big Star's take on British Invasion rock, then left after its first album to tackle personal demons and record as a solo artist. (He died in a car accident in 1978.) During the '80s and '90s, as Big Star gained critical respect as one of the greatest bands that never had a hit, Bell finally got props as its studio craftsman, the underappreciated artist in an underdog band. And his legend grows still. The album "I Am the Cosmos" wasn't released until 1992. Now, to mark the long-awaited release of its Big Star boxed set, Rhino is releasing a deluxe version with a second disc of early work and alternate versions. Almost all of it lives up to the legend.—RL

Producers: John Hill, Sam Endicott
Writer: S. Endicott
Publisher: Chrysalis
Island

The Bravery rode a wave of synthesizers and droning vocals to success in 2005, and the band's lead single from its upcoming third album, "Stir the Blood," is true to that blueprint. Harmonious guitar strums and a static drumbeat kick off "Slow Poison," as electronic loops crawl in and around the riffs. The song's quick tempo and happy-go-lucky melody work in opposition to frontman/songwriter Sam Endicott's bleak lyrics. "Burn burn the house on fire/I'm so sick and tired," Endicott wails. "I can still remember your sound/It's cut-cut-cutting me down." Only at the bridge does Endicott let his veil of apathy slip and inject some urgency into his vocal delivery. The Bravery's signature sound is in full force on "Slow Poison," and it pays off in dividends.—ECJ

Justin Bieber continues to croon his way into the hearts of tween girls everywhere with his sugary second single, "One Less Lonely Girl." Much as he did on his debut single, "One Time," Bieber makes a strong case for why he's the next pop/R&B heartthrob. "I'm gonna put you first, I'll show you what you're worth/If you let me inside your world," he sings. The stump speech is hard to resist, especially when set to an arrangement that follows the lineage of hit midtempo ballads "With You" and "Irreplaceable." Although the lyrics are rather generic, Bieber's smooth delivery is right on point, and his tender vocals blend well with the song's easy-flowing beat. With this latest effort, Bieber keeps building momentum for his Nov. 17 debut album—and young girls around the world couldn't be happier.—CB

JUVENILE

Gotta Get It (TK)

Producer: Precise
Writers: Juvenile, L. Edwards
Publishers: Breka Music/EMI Blackwood Music (BMI) UTP/E1/Atlantic

Juvenile is a pioneer in his own right. The New Orleans rapper enjoyed a slew of Southern bounce hits years before Lil Wayne sold his first millions. Unfortunately, his first official track in three years shows he hasn't evolved as much as one might hope. While the production on "Gotta Get It" has potential (thanks to its organ synths, double-speed drums and those famous "Nolia" claps), the track is missing the kind of infectious chorus Juvenile is known for on past favorites like "Slow Motion." Lyrically, the rapper is also a bit unoriginal, bragging about his "yellow Chevy thing with the door up" and "canaries in the grill," among other material things. Let's hope this is just a warm-up for Juvenile and, as he raps on "Ha," he'll "handle his biz" on the next one.—MC

Interscope

The third Black Eyed Peas single from "The E.N.D." is somewhat of a departure from previous hits "Boom Boom Pow" and "I Gotta Feeling," which collectively spent a record-breaking 26 weeks atop the Billboard Hot 100. While the Peas' circa-3008 production aesthetic is still at the forefront, "Meet Me Halfway" boasts a slightly breezier, more downtempo beat and a vintage Madonna-inspired chorus: "Can you meet me halfway/Right at the borderline/Is where I'm gonna wait for you." Fergie elongates each note for a sensual vocal and offers a nice complement to co-producer Will.i.am, who handles the majority of the rhymes over funk guitar, hand claps and distorted pulses. Already climbing the Hot 100 with their latest, the Peas are evidently on a quest to prove that their hit parade is far from over.—MM

Sony

The controversy over its origins aside, "This Is It"—released Oct. 12 on Michael Jackson's official Web site—is yet another testament to the fact that the King of Pop was very much full of life when he died. "I never heard a single word about you/Falling in love wasn't my plan/I never thought that I would be your lover/Come on please, dear, understand," Jackson belts in his high-pitched, vibrating tenor. His voice is boosted by a medley of gentle violins, jazzy guitar strokes, intermittent finger snaps and horns while a choir chants an escalating series of "oohs" in the background. "This Is It" will be included on the soundtrack to Jackson's movie of the same name. He will forever be missed, but releases like this will make his music live on.—MC

ROCK BY LAURA LEEBOVE

Public Exposure

Steel Panther 'Rawrs' On The Chart

Most of the lyrics by the hard rock/glam metal band Steel Panther are too vulgar for radio. And Michael Starr, the parody act's frontman, says MTV handed Steel Panther the longest edit sheet in the network's history in response to the group's first attempt at a music video.

But those roadblocks haven't kept the Los Angeles quartet from its ongoing mission: to bring heavy metal back to the masses. Through long-running West Coast residencies, grassroots marketing and—surprisingly—radio exposure, Steel Panther has secured an opening slot on ZZ Top's upcoming overseas tour and is filming a pilot for Comedy Central. In the meantime, thanks to the group's success overseas, the U.S. physical release of its debut album, "Feel the Steel" (Universal Republic), was moved up a month to Oct. 6.

Produced by Jay Ruston (the Donnas), "Feel the Steel" is No. 98 on the Billboard 200 this week, selling 6,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. Its earlier digital release netted debuts at No. 123 on the Billboard 200 and No. 3 on the Heatseekers Albums chart the week of Oct. 17.

"If you had told me that radio would have helped the launch of this album, I wouldn't have believed you," says Frank Arigo, senior director of marketing at Universal Republic. Although the first two singles, "Death to All but Metal" and "Community Property," had to be edited before airing, Steel Panther manager Glen Parrish says that having the band perform and do interviews on morning radio shows has been one of the best forms of exposure. "This isn't a traditional release because of the content of the record," Parrish says. "But everywhere they do a morning show, they sell out in that market."

According to the band members' tongue-in-cheek back story, Steel Panther was huge in the '80s, disappeared before the release of its debut and finally returned to the scene decades later. The four tattooed musicians are usually clad in Spandex, go only by their stage names (Starr, Satchel, Lexxi Foxxx and Stix Zadinia) and won't discuss their outside lives. Created in 2000, the potty-mouthed quartet—whose songs almost exclusively talk about women, one-night stands and heavy metal—has been playing frequently sold-out residencies for about a decade. These include stints in Las Vegas at Green Valley Ranch and the Aliante, as well as the Key Club in Los Angeles during which the band has been joined onstage by the likes of Kelly Clarkson and Pink.

"We're an organic, word-of-mouth kind of band because we're not really getting the radio airplay," says Starr, who appears with his bandmates in a videoclip on Billboard.com. "But that's the way this band has always been. We're kind of like herpes: We spread slowly but we're steady."

Metal mission: STEEL PANTHER

The band was known as Danger Kitty, Metal Shop and Metal Skool before adopting its current moniker. A few tracks from the group's self-released first album, "Hole Patrol," were rerecorded for "Feel the Steel," including "Stripper Girl" and "Fat Girl (Thar She Blows)."

In the weeks leading up to the album's release, CD samplers were distributed at various locales across the country, including strip clubs, tattoo parlors, bike shows and this year's Crüe Fest. Or as Arigo describes the advance legwork: "Anywhere you think metal lives."

Following the album's international release in June, the band has become popular in the United Kingdom and Japan. Comedy Centra caught wind of the band after comedian Sara Silverman made an appearance in the "Death t All but Metal" video. A pilot for a weekly scripte comedy show—about bringing heavy metal back naturally—is in the works for early 2010.

"Most people have never heard of thes guys," Arigo says with a laugh. "The initia reaction is, 'Aw, they're totally ripping of Metallica.' Well, yeah, that's what Steel Pan ther does. But even though they write lyric that are really funny, they're amazing musi cians who couldn't be more serious abou bringing metal back." ...

THREE TIMES THE CHARM

Britney Spears debuts at No. 1 on the Billboard Hot 100 with her new single, "3," marking only the 15th song to bow atop the chart in the tally's 51-year history. "3" is also the first title to debut at No. 1 since Taylor Hicks' "American Idol" victory song, "Do I Make You Proud," on the July 1, 2006, chart. ¶ The previous four songs to open at No. 1 were all "American Idol"-related. The last non-"Idol" song to open at No. 1 was Lauryn Hill's "Doo Wop (That Thing)" on the Nov. 14, 1998, chart. ¶ Of the 15 debuts at No. 1, 10 of them occurred between 1995 and 1998. Until the end of 1998, a song could only chart on the Hot 100 if it was available as a commercial single. The bevy of debuts was prompted by singles being withheld from the market in order to maximize chart position, which is based on combining airplay and sales data. At the end of 1998, the Hot 100 changed its formula, allowing airplay-only or noncommercially available songs to chart. ¶ "3" is Spears' third Hot 100 No. 1. Her debut single, " . . . Baby One More Time," spent two weeks at No. 1 in 1999. "Womanizer" claimed a sole week atop the Oct. 25, 2008, chart. —Keith Caulfield

Sisters in song: TEGAN & SARA

ROCK BY JASON LIPSHUTZ

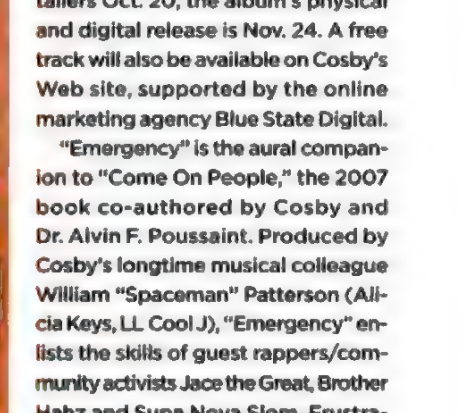
To 'Hell' And Back

Tegan & Sara Hope To Entice Larger U.S. Fan Base With 'Sainthood'

Canadian indie-rock duo Tegan & Sara's snappy songwriting and intimate lyrics have found a steadily growing audience in the United States since the twin sisters started recording songs a decade ago. "The Con," the duo's 2007 album, debuted at No. 34 on the Billboard 200 and led to an opening slot on Death Cab for Cutie's 2008 U.S. tour.

"Sainthood," their sixth full-length due Oct. 27 on Vapor/Sire Records, is Tegan & Sara's most immediate album yet. The propulsive first single, "Hell," was released to iTunes Oct. 6, and with its bouncy bassline and anthemic chorus, the track may be the key to growing the pair's fan base.

"It's less of a goal to get on radio and more of a goal to not resist radio as much as we have in the past," Sara Quin says. "We've had a really comfortable arc in our career, but at this point we recognize there is a fan base we have yet to entice. With this album, I know we have a shot at it."



After writing separately throughout their careers, Tegan & Sara penned lyrics together for the first time during a writing trip to New Orleans in fall 2008. They used the concept of sainthood, inspired by a Leonard Cohen song, as a thesis for piercing songs of devotion and emotional longing.

The duo began recording in May with Howard Redekopp and Death Cab for Cutie's Chris Walla, who advised the girls to shake up their well-worn recording process by playing each song with a full band in the studio instead of relying on overdubbing. "The nature of what Tegan and I did had always been solitary," Quin says. "I felt terrified playing the songs live because, honestly, I didn't know if I could do it. But the songs just sounded more fleshed-out . . . and I think they'll be stronger, especially live."

In conjunction with the album release, Tegan & Sara are issuing "On," "In" and "At," a three-book set that chronicles the sisters' past year through writings and photographs. The self-published books were the vision of Tegan, whose goal was to "make something that fans could hold in their hands—not something to re-create on their computer screens," Quin says.

After a Nov. 2 performance on "The Tonight Show With Conan O'Brien," Tegan & Sara will play select dates in Europe throughout November and launch a two-month U.S. headlining tour in February. While the duo is currently spending six to seven hours per day rehearsing for the shows, the experience of recording "Sainthood" with a full band was great practice for its biggest tour yet.

"We've become a really good live band, and I say that in the most humble way possible," Quin says with a laugh. "We usually dread rehearsals, but this year they've been a breeze." ••••

SOUNDING BOARD

Comedian/actor/educator/author Bill Cosby is ready to unveil his latest project, "Bill Cosby Presents the Cosnarati: State of Emergency." A socially conscious hip-hop CD that focuses on the critical issues affecting young people, the independent project will be launched Oct. 19 during a virtual town hall meeting in New York.

Presented in association with Ustream, the town hall (7 p.m. ET/4 p.m. PT) will air on urban radio station Web sites across the country, on Cosby's Facebook page (facebook.com/billcosby) and BillCosby.com, which will simultaneously relaunch that evening.

Hosted by Cosby and the Cosnarati Band, the event will include the band's first public performance of several songs from "Emergency." Those songs will be available at digital retailers Oct. 20; the album's physical and digital release is Nov. 24. A free track will also be available on Cosby's Web site, supported by the online marketing agency Blue State Digital.

"Emergency" is the aural companion to "Come On People," the 2007 book co-authored by Cosby and Dr. Alvin F. Poussaint. Produced by Cosby's longtime musical colleague William "Spaceman" Patterson (Alicia Keys, LL Cool J), "Emergency" enlists the skills of guest rappers/community activists Jace the Great, Brother Hahz and Supa Nova Slom. Frustration, incarceration and respect for females are among the tracks' themes.

Cosby, who conceived the songs' story concepts but doesn't rap or sing, says the artists' writings hit upon much of the anger and frustration many people feel. "I came up with ideas and asked them to think deeper, but I didn't have to push. It was like, 'Thank you, Dr. Cosby. We want to do this.' "

Supa Nova Slom adds, "Dr. Cosby offered his elder wisdom, then we brought our young swag and interpreted it into hip-hop. Our generation and society at large are at a real crossroads for survival; the times demand that we reopen this chapter of hip-hop."

Noting the backlash he's received for controversial comments about African-American life, Cosby stands by the album. "People who don't want it to succeed will say I'm a curmudgeon who doesn't like poor or young people," he says. "But these rappers are young males running down the truth about the urban side of life. It's time for a change." —Gail Mitchell

HAMMOND UNSTOPPABLE

A hit single, an increasingly savvy Internet fan base and key release-week appearances have helped gospel veteran Fred Hammond score on the charts. His latest project, "Love Unstoppable," debuted at No. 1 on Billboard's Top Gospel Albums chart, making it his sixth chart-topper and third No. 1 debut. Released Sept. 29 on Verity Records, the set bowed at No. 26 on the Billboard 200. The album also spun off a top five gospel hit with the lead single, "They That Wait," featuring John P. Kee.

Hammond says the music's "simplicity" resonates with listeners. "People want it more simple and less complicated right now," he says. "They want to be able to sing it with you."

The album's theme also came easily to him. "Even before we started writing, I said, 'It's going to be something about love.' I just love love. I love what love does."

On the album's release date, Hammond was the featured artist at the Music Experience with Chicago retailer Dedry Jones. The live event consists of a 45-minute interview and 15-minute performance. "It's 'Inside the Actors Studio' for musicians," says Verity Gospel Music Group senior director of marketing Cheryl Marks. "He attracted a huge turnout, with people also buying the album at the event." Additional release-week appearances included an in-store performance at Stonecrest Mall in Atlanta.

Powerful love: FRED HAMMOND

Adding more fuel to Hammond's gospel fire were appearances as himself in J.D. Lawrence's play "The Clean Up Woman." Hammond has performed during stopovers in New York, Houston and Dallas. "It's hilarious," he says. "I'll probably do a couple more."

Rounding out Verity's marketing strategy was an iTunes campaign supplemented by messages from Hammond on Facebook, Twitter and other social networks.

"I started Twitter three weeks ago," the singer says, "and have almost 4,000 followers so far. People who support what I do in the gospel audience have become more computer- and Internet-savvy."

However, as Marks notes, there's no denying that church remains a strong vehicle for new music exposure. "We're facing the same challenges everyone else is," she says. "We don't have as many outlets when it comes to consumer publications so we rely more on the Web. But what we do have are built-in marketing and touring opportunities through the church. That's a fan base we definitely tap into." —Deborah Evans Price

Bublé Bests Kiss To Earn Second No. 1

This week's biggest debuts on the Billboard 200 are brought to you by Oprah Winfrey and Wal-Mart.

The power of Winfrey's influence can be seen at the top of the chart, where Michael Bublé's "Crazy Love" enters at No. 1 with 132,000 copies sold, according to Nielsen SoundScan, after only three days of availability.

Meanwhile, Kiss claims its highest-charting album with the Wal-Mart-exclusive "Sonic Boom" at No. 2 with 108,000 sold.

"Crazy" was pushed up from its original Oct. 13 release date to an off-cycle release on Friday, Oct. 9—likely to capitalize on Bublé's chat and performance on that day's "Oprah" episode. Because SoundScan's tracking week ends at the close of business on Sunday evening, Bublé's opening week is all the more impressive, since it comprises three days of sales.

Bublé's last set, the 2007 "Call Me Irresponsible," debuted with 212,000 sold at No. 2 before moving to No. 1 the following week. "Crazy" is the artist's third top 10 album, as his second studio set, "It's Time," debuted and peaked at No. 7 in 2005.

Had Bublé appeared on "Oprah" without having already released "Crazy," the impact would've been lessened. There's something about seeing Winfrey say to the camera, while holding a CD, about how so-and-so's new album was released "today." There's an urgency and immediacy there that connects with viewers.

Bublé follows Barbra Streisand's "Love Is the Answer" in the Billboard 200 penthouse, giving the chart back-to-back No. 1s aided by Winfrey. Streisand, however, appeared on "Oprah" the Friday before her album hit retail on Tuesday, Sept. 29.

Bublé becomes just the second artist this year—after Chrisette Michele—to reach No. 1 on the Billboard 200 without ever having had a top 40 single on the Billboard Hot 100. His best rank on the tally so far is the 2007 song "Everything," which hit No. 46.

Bublé's Hot 100 fortunes have been hampered by his lack of radio airplay outside of the adult contemporary format, where he's a cornerstone. The new album's lead single, "Haven't Met You Yet," bullets at No. 8 on the tally this week, becoming his sixth top 10. The tune has yet to reach any other Billboard airplay chart.

Yet, his "Crazy" debut at No. 1 on the Billboard 200 proves that one doesn't always need multiformat radio airplay to prompt strong sales. Especially when Winfrey's in your corner.

"Crazy" may continue to reign at No. 1 next week, although one of the most anticipated soundtracks of the year could bump Bublé from the top slot. The "New Moon" soundtrack—moved up to a Friday, Oct. 16 release from Oct. 20—may rule the roost with just three days of sales. Sound familiar?

YOU WANTED THE BEST: Kiss' arrival at No. 2 on the Billboard 200 with "Sonic Boom" gives the band its highest-charting album, but its 108,000-copy opener is also the group's second-best sales week since Nielsen SoundScan began tracking data in 1991. The act's previous chart high came with the 1998 album "Psycho-Circus," which debuted and peaked at No. 3 with 110,000 sold. That album's opening week is the group's best SoundScan sales week.

Some industry prognosticators had projected the new album's first-week sales figure to be much higher—as much as 180,000 copies. However, those early forecasts were based on how well the set sold on its first day of release. But as the week progressed, the album's sales tapered off sharper than expected, thus making the initial projections much too high.

"Sonic Boom" is Kiss' first studio album since "Psycho-Circus" and is a multidisc set. The first CD features the "Sonic Boom" album, while the second disc features live versions of some of the band's biggest hits. The third disc is a DVD with six live performances. The set carries a list price of $14.98 at Wal-Mart but was sale-priced for $12.

All told, "Sonic Boom" is Kiss' eighth top 10 album. Its first, "Alive!," reached No. 9 in 1975. The band had three more top 10s in the '70s and another three in the '90s. ....

In a Teutonic twist on retailer-specific exclusive packages, a Best Buy deluxe version includes a bonus disc with German versions of the set's songs. (Naturally, since the quartet hails from Germany.)

After the band appeared on "The "Oprah Winfrey Show" Oct. 5—and performed "Don't Stop Believin' " and "Faithfully"—this set re-enters with 10,000 sold (up 681%) and its best sales week since October 2008.

The album, first released in October 2008, was reissued last week with four bonus live tracks. In turn, the set re-enters with a 285% gain and jumps 39-19 on Top Country Albums.

After the physical version of the album came out Oct. 6, following a week of digital exclusivity, the set jumps with a 31% gain. It also earns Heatseeker Graduate honors, prompting its removal from the Heatseekers Albums chart.

The fourth charting set for the French duo starts with 6,000 copies and enters at No. 5 on Top Dance/Electronic Albums, giving the act its fourth top 10 on the latter chart.

102

The singer/songwriter performed two songs from this album on the Oct. 13 edition of NBC's "Saturday Night Live," sparking a 113% increase and her highest chart rank since early September.

155

The runner-up from the sixth season of "American Idol" returns with his second album and a label change from J to Tommy Boy. The electronic pop set also starts at No. 7 on Top Dance/Electronic Albums.

164

Though the digital edition of this album has been available since June, the CD only became widely available Oct. 6. All told, the set is up 637%. The band also played "Jimmy Kimmel Live!" Oct. 6.

178

The 32-song set was the Oct. 10 daily deal at Amazon's MP3 store for $1.99. It also debuts on Top Jazz Albums at No. 3.

185

The singer/songwriter's eighth studio album enters with 3,000 sold, and it's her first for Downtown Records. All her prior sets reached the Billboard 200, except the 2005 jazz album "The Spirit Music Jamia," which went to No. 4 on the Contemporary Jazz list.

The act's debut single flies into the top 10 with 138,000 downloads and a 40% audience increase (to 20 million impressions).

The song moves 11-8 on Hot 100 Airplay, extending her lead for most top 10s on that chart by a female this decade to 13. Among all artists, only T-Pain (16) has more.

The title hits the top 10 of Hot Digital Songs (12-10) with 106,000 downloads, up 57% from last week.

This 15-year-old Canadian's debut at No. 16 also opens at No. 7 on Hot Digital Songs (113,000), which surpasses the rank on both charts of "One Time," his current radio single. "Time," meanwhile, has its best sales week yet with 60,000.

With his legal issues fading from the spotlight, he makes his first chart appearance as a lead vocalist since "Dreamer" debuted in August 2008.

BETWEEN THE BULLETS

SPEARS STARTS AT SUMMIT

Fueled by 255,000 first-week downloads, Britney Spears' "3" is the first song to debut at No. 1 on the Billboard Hot 100 in more than three years (see story, page 34). The track is Spears' third Hot 100 No. 1, following her 1999 debut single, "... Baby One More Time," and "Womanizer," which topped the list for a single week one year ago in the Oct. 25, 2008, issue. Spears' download total for "3" is also the largest first-week sum by a female artist since "Womanizer" debuted with 286,000 last October. At radio, "3" jumps 38-25 on the Mainstream Top 40 chart and debuts at No. 49 on Hot 100 Airplay with 24.7 million listener impressions. —Silvio Pietroluongo

Kelly Clarkson notches her seventh top 10 on the Adult Top 40 chart, as "Already Gone" rises 13-10. The advance pushes Clarkson past Avril Lavigne for most top 10s among women this decade.

Trailing Clarkson's and Lavigne's top 10 totals are Michelle Branch, Sheryl Crow and Pink with five each. Goo Goo Dolls lead all acts with 10 top 10s on the chart in that span.

"Already Gone" concurrently debuts on Adult Contemporary at No. 24, marking Clarkson's highest career entrance on the chart; "My Grown Up Christmas List" opened at No. 26 in 2003.

On Mainstream Top 40, Clarkson's RCA labelmate Leona Lewis returns at No. 40 with "Happy," the lead single from the latter's second album, "Echo," due Nov. 17. Lewis spent nine weeks atop the tally last year with her debut smash, "Bleeding Love."

KEITH'S EIGHTH NO. 1

Toby Keith snares his eighth No. 1 on Top Country Albums with "American Ride," his 17th consecutive top 10 on that list. With more than 90,000 copies sold, "Ride" is also the Oklahoman's 10th top 10 on the Billboard 200, where it starts at No. 3. Each of Keith's eight No. 1s debuted at the summit on Top Country Albums, including seven studio sets and one hits package. Elsewhere on the country chart, Luke Bryan lands his second top five start and biggest sales week (58,000 sold) with his second album, "Doin' My Thing" (No. 2). His debut album, "I'll Stay Me," opened at No. 2 in September 2007. —Wade Jessen

BETWEEN THE BULLETS

PLEASURE IS ALL HIS AT NO. 1

Pleasure P scores his first No. 1 on Mainstream R&B/Hip-Hop either as a solo artist or with his former group Pretty Ricky as "Under" rises 3-1. His previous solo attempts, "Did You Wrong" and "Boyfriend #2," peaked at No. 15 (in November 2008) and No. 2 (in May), respectively. As a member of Pretty Ricky he charted six times, including two No. 2 singles.

Elsewhere, Brian McKnight logs his 16th top 10 on Adult R&B with the 13-10 rise of "What I've Been Waiting For." He remains in third place for the most top 10s but inches closer to the second-place holder, Luther Vandross, who has 18. Gerald Levert leads the top 10 tally with 21 since the chart's launch in 1993.

Also on Adult R&B, Usher logs his 20th and highest debut as "Papers" enters at No. 30. His prior best, "Here I Stand," bowed at No. 31 in September 2008 and later became his first No. 1 on the chart.

This 5 Mario's 10th consecutive, and perhaps final, week as the runner-up behind Maxwell's "Pretty Wings." His lead over the upward-moving Jay-Z and friends at No. 3 is a slim 306,000 impressions.

The song posts the year's best audience increase (up 10.6 million impressions), surpassing the 10.1 million earned by Jamie Foxx's "Blame It" in February.

How I Got It," which seems to be settling into consistent airplay. With its surge of 2.1 million impressions last week and 1.5 million this week, the track has its best back-to-back audience gains.

40

A spray from 27 new stations aids Omarion's second straight 20-plus-position leap. In all, the track has 6.6 million impressions among all chart reporters.

The rapper's latest hit keeps growing outside of its Southern roots. Three of the song's top five stations are in Cincinnati, Chicago and Detroit.

BETWEEN THE BULLETS

JACKSON'S 'THIS IS IT' DEBUTS

With radio's swift reaction to Michael Jackson's posthumously released "This Is It," the song earns its first Billboard ink as it debuts at No. 43 on Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs. From its release to radio Oct. 12 and the chart's closing the following day, R&B radio contributed 5.9 million in audience. In all, it has 12.2 million from 1,300 stations monitored by Nielsen BDS. However, even with strong interest in the song, Epic says there aren't any plans for a digital single and it will be available only on the same-titled album due Oct. 27. Without the digital component, Jackson's potential for a high rank on the Billboard Hot 100 is limited. —Raphael George

David Bisbal's "Esclavo de Sus Besos" debuts at No. 2 on Tropical Airplay, the chart's best debut in nearly two years, with 2 million audience impressions (up 743%). The track also opens at No. 10 on Latin Rhythm Airplay and jumps 8-2 on Hot Latin Songs (12.5 million impressions, up 62%), where Bisbal is searching for his second No. 1.

Alejandro Sanz's "Looking for Paradise" leaps 38-9 on Latin Rhythm Airplay (1.6 million impressions, up 147%) to become his second top 10 title on the chart. The increased rhythmic rotation also propels the Alicia Keys-assisted track 9-7 on Hot Latin Songs (9.3 million, up 23%).

BETWEEN THE BULLETS

THE PHILOSOPHER HAS RETURNED

After a four-year hiatus, Vico C returns to the charts with his latest set, "Babilla," debuting at No. 13 on Top Latin Albums. It's his eighth title on the chart, and fifth top 20, since "Aquel Que Habia Muerto" peaked at No. 8 in the Dec. 26, 1998, issue. The pioneering Latin rapper was the first solo rhythmic artist to chart in the top 20 on Top Latin Albums, years before the genre's emergence and transition into the mainstream.

AVE KOZ DONATES WINE SALES TO STARLIGHT

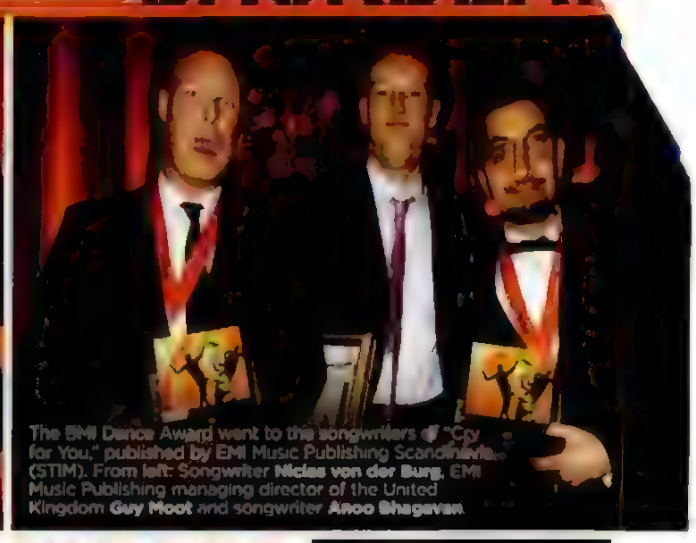
zz saxophonist Dave Koz never imagined that a conversaon with a fan about his love for wine would lead to his own and being carried in Whole Foods Market—or that proceeds om the venture would benefit his favorite charity, the Starlight ildren's Foundation.

But after overhearing Koz discuss his desire to develop a ne brand during his annual Smooth Jazz cruise in 2008, the n approached him, saying, "I really love this wine idea and nt to be able to help you in any way I can," Koz recalls.

The fan turned out to be Patrick Bradley, Whole Foods president for the Southern Pacific region. After deciding that a aritable angle could be worked out with selling the wine in lect Whole Foods stores, Koz and Bradley headed to Califora's Napa Valley and chose Vinum Cellars to make KOZ Wine. ree varietals are available at Whole Foods stores in Southn California, Arizona and Nevada, with prices ranging from .6.99 to $29.99.

But Koz says the best part about the project is that 100% of s earnings from the wine sales will be donated to the Starlight ildren's Foundation, an organization that helps ill children d their families cope with pain through entertainment, edcation and family activities. Koz has been a global ambassaor to the charity for 17 years.

"This isn't a vanity project for me," Koz says. "It's someing where you can do good and drink good at the same time."



Koz hopes the wine will soon be available for purchase onne and at other retail outlets. "It's something I'm committd to and love doing," he says. "So hopefully in the years to me you'll start to see it in places besides Whole Foods."

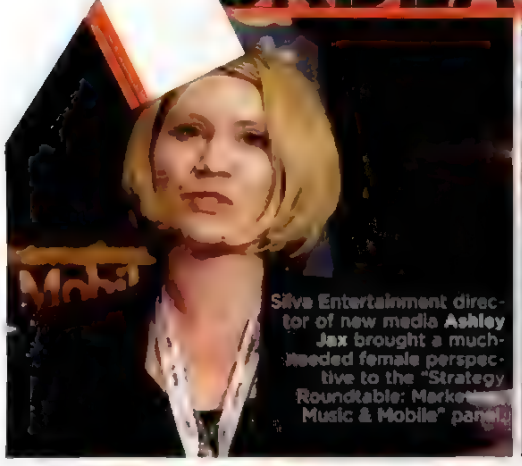
INSIDE TRACK

NOT SO INVISIBLE

Los Amigos Invisibles, the Venezuelan funk band from Caracas that relocated to Brooklyn more than eight years ago, will celebrate its 20th anniversary in 2011. But the party has already started, with the group enjoying an ever-growing following throughout Mexico, South America and its adopted home country.

In the last three months the band's sixth studio album, "Commercial," was released simultaneously in six Latin American countries and the United States; the act also headlined a 13-city tour throughout Venezuela, the first in its native land; closed out a packed tent at the Austin City Limits Music Festival; and was nominated for a Latin Grammy Award, its fifth chance at the trophy.



And there's more to come. The Amigos recorded a Sept. 10 concert at Mexico City's Teatro Metropolitan for a future DVD release. "American Troglodyte," a track the band recorded with Norman Cook and David Byrne, will appear on that duo's forthcoming album. And the group is starting to prepare for a summer 2010 concert collaboration with the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, as part of an upcoming festival curated by friend and fellow Venezuelan cultural ambassador, the L.A. Phil's newly inaugurated musical director Gustavo Dudamel.

"A lot of people are turning their eyes on Venezuelan musicians because of him," says Amigos guitarist/bandleader Jose Luis Pardo. "It's like the way people started thinking about Brazilian music when Gilberto Gil, Tom Jobim and all the Tropicalia first emerged on the international stage . . . There's a lot of awareness right now and I think all Venezuelan musicians will be able to thank Gustavo for that for quite a while."

Appeasing Piracy

Net Neutrality Proposals Would Hinder Anti-Piracy Efforts

BY RICK CARNES

An Internet where all file transmissions are treated equally while their legality is impossible to determine will continue to be a disaster for songwriters. The Internet as it's currently configured isn't "neutral." It's a thieves' paradise.

Unfortunately, this is precisely the regulatory regime proposed this week by the Federal Communications Commission in its draft rules regarding "network neutrality," the principle that Internet users should be able to surf the Web free of any restrictions imposed by their Internet service provider (ISP).

The Songwriters Guild of America read with great interest the remarks of the participants at an earlier FCC-hosted workshop on the role of online content in the broadband ecosystem. Some participants expressed their fear that unless the commission imposed "net neutrality" by law, customer privacy and speech freedoms would be compromised. This isn't only inaccurate but also represents a back-door attempt by some technology companies to enhance their competitive positions while rationalizing the theft of private property for their own benefit.

The most prominent purveyor of this line of thinking was Gigi Sohn, cofounder/president of the advocacy group Public Knowledge, who tried to equate "net neutrality" with avoiding content regulation. But in order to make such an argument, Sohn needed to downplay the rampant looting of copyrighted works on broadband networks. She did so by stating that "claims of damage to the industry were suspect" and that there wasn't sufficient data on the topic.

Nothing could be further from the truth. According to the RIAA, the value of U.S. recorded-music shipments totaled $8.5 billion in 2008, down 18.2% from $10.4 billion in 2007 and down 41% from $14.3 billion in 2000. According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, songwriter income dropped 32% between 2003 and 2006 alone. Every major music publisher I have contacted tells me they have laid off at least half, and sometimes all, of their songwriters in the 10 years since piracy began to decimate the music industry. The level of damage isn't "suspect."

The unfortunate reality of the digital world is that online piracy of music is rampant and has deeply and materially harmed the songwriter community. Yet Public Knowledge explicitly asks the FCC to prevent the companies that own these private networks from addressing the problem of piracy. Sohn's free speech and privacy arguments merely seek to intellectualize highway robbery.

> The current situation, which permits a small percentage of looters to control a vast majority of a communication network's bandwidth for the purpose of committing illegal acts, is simply unacceptable.

Sohn did say that she thought pirates "stink" and "should be thrown in jail," but this came off as lip service considering that she continues to oppose proposals to enhance criminal liability or penalties for copyright pirates. She even refuses to have the Internet service of persistent copyright infringers temporarily suspended. Instead she suggests that ISPs should "shame them" with warning letters. Songwriters believe it's foolhardy to trust the personal ethics of thieves to solve the persistent problem of illegal downloading.

Comments filed with the FCC note that more than half of the traffic on broadband networks stems from use of peer-to-peer networks by a small minority of users and that the overwhelming majority of P2P traffic represents the unlawful stealing of copyrighted works.

The current situation, which permits a small percentage of looters to control a vast majority of a communication network's bandwidth for the purpose of committing illegal acts, is simply unacceptable. Efforts to perpetuate this system, which incidentally is causing frequent and significant slowdowns in service to the law-abiding users Sohn purports to represent, is difficult to fathom.

The greatest risk of harm to consumers comes from regulatory and legislative proposals to prevent responsible ISPs from managing their networks. At the moment, the free market is the best weapon we have to combating Internet piracy. Technology created the illegal file-sharing monster, but more technology can detect and deter those practices that are illegal. In other words, we must fight technology with technology. Unfortunately, the current net neutrality regulatory proposals would smother this nascent technological counterattack against Internet piracy.

The songwriting profession right now is like a person drowning in the quicksand of digital piracy. Of those whose heads remain above the surface, many are up to their armpits. There's a chance that some new technology will be the rope thrown to us before it's too late. But companies and entrepreneurs need an economic incentive to develop those anti-piracy technologies. Regulations restricting the ability of ISPs to manage their networks would discourage the development of these vital technologies and would eliminate the last bit of hope that songwriters have to survive the digital onslaught. ...

MODEL MAKEOVER

As MySpace Sharpens Its Focus On Entertainment, Music Shows The Way Forward

In an effort to recapture its momentum in online social networking, MySpace is trying to reinvent itself as a social entertainment hub.

Providing the template for these efforts? MySpace Music, parent News Corp.'s joint venture with the four major labels.

The same features that MySpace Music has been rolling out—content sharing, improved recommendation functions, usage metrics and promotional programs with labels and artists—will eventually be offered to other entertainment companies like movie studios, game publishers and TV networks.

MySpace Music will serve as a proving ground for these technologies and services before they're implemented across the broader site.

"You'll see over time that the strategic shift in MySpace that's being deployed is wholly aligned with the types of products we're launching right now," says MySpace Music president Courtney Holt. "We're working together, and this all is part of the larger vision for where MySpace is going."

The efforts come as other online music offerings continue to proliferate. Google is expected to provide details on its plans for a music search service that has the backing of the majors. And Facebook is rolling out the ability for users to "gift" MP3 downloads and streaming digital songs to their Facebook friends (Billboard.biz, Oct. 21).

MySpace CEO Owen Van Natta and chief product officer Jason Hirschhorn are looking to convert all the service's social networking tools into a platform for sharing, recommending and discussing entertainment rather than the sort of free-for-all discussion it has facilitated to date.

To get an idea of what this will mean for MySpace members, consider MySpace Music's new video hub. Members can not only search and browse videos on demand, but they will also get recommendations based on what videos their friends are watching and receive notifications when their favorite artists post new videos. The same technologies that MySpace Music built to allow this can easily transfer to other types of content elsewhere on MySpace.

"Social recommendations are a big deal, and we haven't done enough to expose them on the site," Holt says. "If you and I have similar tastes in music, the delta between us is of interest to both of us. Figuring out a way to expose that . . . is going to be a big focus for us in the future."

Of course doing so requires content, and MySpace hopes to lure the entertainment industry with programs designed to promote their work and analyze its consumption as a way of obtaining that content. Looking to MySpace Music again as an example, the new Introducing and Artist Dashboard initiatives serve as the blueprint for this effort.

The Introducing program is designed to promote five artists each quarter to the MySpace community by featuring them on the Music home page, hosting debuts of new albums and singles, adding them to featured playlists and filming special behind-the-scenes footage—all timed around prerelease and release-day activities. Canadian singer/songwriter Lights, who's signed to Warner Bros. Records, was the test subject for the new initiative, which has now expanded to include acts Sherwood, We the Kings, Kid Sister and Serena Ryder. Each of them will be the subject of a 12-week promotional push across the MySpace platform. MySpace could easily do much the same for movie premieres and videogame launches.

And the Artist Dashboard feature—which provides information on the number of streams and views for songs and artists' profiles pages, as well as information on the age, gender and location of those fans—illustrates the kind of metrics that MySpace can share with other content providers to help inform their promotional and marketing efforts.

Rolling out these features to other parts of MySpace won't simply be a matter of flicking a switch. While music is part of the MySpace DNA, it doesn't have the same history or relationships in film, TV or games. Reaching that same level of synergy with other elements of the entertainment industry will take time.

But MySpace's partners in the music industry have faith they can pull this off and welcome a service that focuses on all forms of entertainment. After all, TV shows, films and videogames all have soundtracks, and adding them to the social network may provide new opportunities to promote music.

"If they can figure out music, they can figure it all out probably," says Jeremy Welt, senior VP of new media for Warner Bros. Records. "I like the increased focus. There's a ton of things they're working on to improve music. I like the fact they're trying to get this right." ....

>>GOOGLE, MAJORS TO PARTNER
Google is partnering with major labels to launch a new feature to make it easier for music fans to discover, sample and buy songs on the search engine, according to two people familiar with the plan. The new feature will be facilitated by start-ups iLike and LaLa, which will enable songs to be streamed in the Google page that will also feature a "buy" button to help reduce the number of steps fans must take to acquire music.

>>JAPANESE SHIPMENTS DOWN 14%
Figures from the Recording Industry Assn. of Japan for the January to September 2009 period show a continued downturn in physical shipments of music in Japan. International repertoire also continued to slide. A total of 156.7 million audio product units were shipped during those months, down 14% from the same period in 2008. The wholesale monetary value totaled 185.4 billion yen ($2 billion) and represents a drop of 13% from the same period of the previous year.

>>CRACKER BARREL TO OFFER JACKSON COLLECTION
Cracker Barrel Old Country Store will introduce the Alan Jackson Collection, a 50-plus-piece assortment of products created in conjunction with Jackson and available at Cracker Barrel beginning Nov. 1. The collection features clothing, iPod and exclusives like the CD "Songs of Love and Heartache," which will include two unreleased songs.

Battle Tested

Music Publishers Emerge Winners From Royalty Tussles

During the past year-and-a-half, as the recording industry grappled with the critical task of establishing new royalty rates for music, the negotiations were fraught with risk for the National Music Publishers' Assn.

But looking back on the resulting string of negotiated settlements and Copyright Royalty Board (CRB) rulings, it's clear that the NMPA and its president/CEO David Israelite have navigated these potentially treacherous waters with uncommon skill and savvy.

Along with the RIAA and the Digital Media Assn., the NMPA benefits from the historic settlement that all three groups reached in June 2008 to set royalty rates for interactive streams and tethered downloads.

But the NMPA also secured important victories in the CRB's broader ruling in October 2008 that set mechanical royalties for digital and physical music. That decision incorporated the terms of the settlement on interactive streams and tethered downloads but also set a 24-cent statutory mechanical royalty rate on mastertone ringtones and imposed a 1.5% late fee on the payment of mechanical royalties, crucial gains for music publishers that are being appealed by the RIAA.

More recently, the NMPA capitalized on the leverage it gained from the late-fee ruling to secure another big win for music publishers, negotiating an agreement with the RIAA that will deliver publishing companies a windfall of more than $264 million in mechanical royalty payments composed of pending and unmatched royalty money held by the four major labels (Billboard, Oct. 17).

As a result of the settlement, the labels will change business practices that have been frustrating publishers, such as withholding all song royalties on an album when the royalty split for a single song is the subject of a dispute among songwriters. Also, the major labels agreed to stop withholding an album's digital royalties when there's a dispute involving CD mechanicals for that album.

Publishers Place
ED CHRISTMAN

While RIAA chairman/CEO Mitch Bainwol downplays the late fees as a "secondary issue," music publishers are convinced that they were the main reason why the NMPA was able to get the majors to the negotiating table.

"They have had some of that money for more than 10 years," says a senior executive at an independent publishing company. "If they really wanted to pay it out, they would have figured something before now."

The changes should help ensure that labels will properly license compositions before they release CDs or digital downloads. In exchange, publishers who join the settlement will help resolve song splits and will agree to waive late-fee penalties as long as labels are putting forth their best efforts to abide by the new set of business practices.

At the helm: NMPA president/CEO DAVID ISRAELITE

Besides extracting concessions that publishers have long wanted from the labels, the NMPA's Israelite was equally astute in navigating the political minefields of the music publishing landscape. By incorporating an opt-in component to the RIAA settlement and setting it up so that all participating parties will be able to see what they'll get beforehand, publishers don't feel like they're having anything shoved down their throat. Even better, if publishers don't like their share of the settlement and opt out, they're still free to pursue whatever means they currently have at their disposal to get what they think is their due.

Beyond that, Israelite shrewdly avoided triggering the concerns of independent publishers by not picking the Harry Fox Agency (HFA) to oversee the disbursement of settlement payments and instead hiring "special master" Kenneth R. Feinberg, who administered the Sept. 11 Victim Compensation Fund and is cu
rently administering TAF bailout funds for the U.S. D
partment of the Treasury.

Some indie publishing cor
panies have long viewed tl music-licensing clearinghous rightly or wrongly, as beir more focused on the concer of major publishers.

"David did a tremendous job," a indie publishing executive says. "I ha no doubt his intentions are right. H ing Feinberg to oversee this is a re honest effort to give this settlement ir partiality. I would lose my mind if F was administering this settlement."

Still, when Israelite attended a r cent meeting of the Assn. of Indepe dent Music Publishers to explain t terms of the settlement, he used t that HFA played a key role in bringi

it about, by providing financial su

The only benefit NMPA is seeki is requiring publishers who opt in the settlement to join the trade grou

Given everything that the NMPA h

Recording Academy Courts Manager Support Of Performance Royalty

Managers and partners: Attending the Recording Academy's Sept. 15 meeting on the Performance Rights Act were (from left) artist managers DEBORAH KLEIN, PAT MAGNARELLA, RON LAFFITTE, MATHEW KNOWLES and SUSAN MARKHEIM; Recording Academy president/CEO NEIL PORTNOW; and artist managers PETER LEAK, SIMON RENSHAW, DAN FIELD, MICHAEL LIPPMAN, IRVING AZOFF and ROB McDERMOTT.

The Recording Academy has begun enlisting the support of artist managers in its efforts to gain passage of the Performance Rights Act, which would require U.S. terrestrial radio stations to pay artists and labels performance royalties on recordings they air.

In a Sept. 15 meeting in Santa Monica, Calif., the academy updated managers on its artist advocacy efforts.

Managers are "not exactly a group that has a forum of its own," academy president/CEO Neil Portnow says. "Not everybody was as deeply informed as you might think, so it was a good chance for everybody to get some detailed information and let them ask questions and understand where we are."

Veteran manager Simon Renshaw says the meeting made it clear that there's a global dimension to the issue: U.S. artists won't get paid radio royalties they're owed in other countries until stateside radio reciprocates with payments to overseas collecting agencies. "They're holding far more money from American artists than we're holding for a lot of those international artists," Renshaw says.

By the end of this year, the academy expects either floor votes in the House and Senate on the act or negotiatio with the National Assn. of Broadca ers to shape the legislation. The Se ate Judiciary Committee passed the Oct. 15, putting a radio performan royalty law closer to passage than i

Subscription Renewal

New Round Of Online Music Services Try Their Hand At A Struggling Model

How risky is the ad-supported music business? So risky that the next generation of online music services is opting to take another stab at the still-struggling monthly subscription model instead.

While the knee-jerk reaction among digital entertainment pundits is that any monthly subscription music service is doomed, the digital music landscape has changed enough in the past year to warrant new experimentation with a payment model that industry executives hope will play an important role in the future.

By Thanksgiving, the music blogging site MOG, led by founder/CEO David Hyman, plans to launch a full-song streaming service, charging $5 per month for unlimited streams and five downloads per month. Kazaa, Skype and Joost founders Niklas Zennstrom and Janus Friis are launching a music subscription startup called Rdio. Daniel Ek, co-founder/CEO of the ad-supported music streaming service Spotify, is focusing heavily on bolstering the service's subscription-based premium tier as it eyes a U.S. launch early next year. And in the United Kingdom, the satellite TV service BSkyB has launched a $10-per-month unlimited streaming service that includes 10 monthly downloads.

Given how the incumbent subscription services Rhapsody and Napster have struggled to break the 1 million-subscriber mark, it seems like folly to follow in their footsteps. But new subscription services like MOG, Spotify and BSkyB are each launching their initiatives with a large installed user base to which they can market and upsell other products and services.

In addition, Napster, MOG and BSkyB include MP3 downloads free of digital rights management in plans that cost about the same as those downloads alone would cost at iTunes. By doing so, they're hoping to separate the cost of the service from the value of the music in the consumer's mind. And because those DRM-free tracks are compatible with the iPod, it improves their ability to compete with iTunes by focusing on full-song streaming—the one element that the Apple store lacks.

Moreover, one of the most frustrating features of music subscriptions—DRM-wrapped tracks that are rendered unplayable after a subscription lapses—appears to be nearing its demise. Napster and Rhapsody struggled mightily to market plans based on tethered downloads, but their Windows-based incompatibility with the iPod doomed these efforts from the start.

With the emergence of a mass market of smart-phone and Wi-Fi-enabled devices, subscription services can simply let users stream their music from their device of choice—including the iPhone—much like they stream music online. No clunky file transfer necessary.

But new subscription services still have to determine how to communicate their value to consumers who are used to owning music outright or downloading it for free from peer-to-peer networks. The newcomers also face the same licensing headaches as other music services. While labels have grown more open to innovative models, they still look for the lion's share of revenue stemming from online music. For music services shouldering the cost of marketing, technological innovation and customer relationship management, the need to quickly scale their subscriber base will remain a constant challenge.

With that in mind, it's unclear whether the $5-per-month model proposed by MOG and Napster is actually sustainable. Industry sources say Napster, for one, doesn't plan to maintain its $5 monthly price indefinitely. While the low price point looks appealing, history suggests that price alone isn't enough to draw skeptical music fans to the subscription model. The now-defunct Yahoo Music Unlimited once offered a streaming-only plan that offered roughly the same monthly rate with the purchase of an annual subscription. When it launched, the low-price plan seemed a bold move that would provide badly needed momentum to the subscription music model. It didn't.

The most promising way to expand music subscriptions to a larger market is bundling access to unlimited music with another service, such as an Internet subscription or mobile data plan. Spotify has taken a few steps toward that end in Europe, and BSkyB can bundle its service as an option for its existing satellite TV offering. The first subscription service to successfully strike that kind of deal on a mass scale could be the first to prove the potential of the model. Until then, it's all just potential. ••••

ORIGAMI AUDIO

For the tech geek who wants all the latest gadgets but is also concerned about the impact such products have on the environment, there's OrigAudio's Fold n' Play speakers. Made from recycled paper, the one-watt speakers collapse and retake shape through prefabricated folded lines, like origami. The 3.1-inch cubes come in five designs, plus an unadorned model that lets users create their own artwork. They're compatible with any audio device with a headphone jack and don't require an external power source.

A pair of Fold n' Plays costs $16, and six-packs are available for $60. —AB

Yo Gabba Gabba! Live Offers A Different Spin On Family Shows

It's party time. Yo Gabba Gabba! is the latest Michael Cohl venture that looks like a winner.

Yo Gabba Gabba! Live: There's a Party in My City, the first live U.S. touring show for the popular Nick Jr. TV show "Yo Gabba Gabba!," is going to be a hit, as well as perhaps the newest staple in the profitable family entertainment genre.

Conceived by the animation/entertainment company W!ldbrain and produced and promoted by Cohl's Miami-based S2BN Entertainment, Yo Gabba Gabba! Live put doubles on sale in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles and sold them out immediately, adding more dates in all three markets. The tour begins Nov. 14 at L.A.'s Shrine Expo Hall, then heads to New York's Beacon Theatre Nov. 21 and the Rosemont Theatre outside of Chicago Dec. 5.

Cohl is best-known as the promoter of the Rolling Stones' world tours since 1989, and he was a key player in orchestrating Live Nation's mega-deals with acts like Madonna, U2, Jay-Z and Shakira. Cohl resigned as chairman of Live Nation and CEO of Live Nation Artists in June 2008 and launched S2BN later that year.

Overseeing Yo Gabba Gabba! Live for S2BN is Mike Luba, the company's president of music and family entertainment. Luba founded the artist management/marketing firm Madison House (String Cheese Incident, Drive-By Truckers), then left to join Cohl at Live Nation Artists two years ago. When Cohl split with Live Nation, Luba followed him, eventually bringing "Yo Gabba Gabba!" to his attention.

Luba says he heard about the show from friends with children. "I have a 3-year-old who actually saw it and went totally mental," Luba says. "Then I saw it on TV and went kind of mental."

The 2-year-old TV show, which was conceived by Scott Schultz and Christian Jacobs, stands apart from other kids' programming thanks to the surprisingly hip mix of acts it has featured, including MGMT, the Roots, Mates of State, the Shins and the Ting Tings.

"Christian is the front guy for the Aquabats, so the show has a kind of punk rock sensibility to it," Luba says. "When I first saw it I had that moment of like, 'Holy mackerel, this could be "Sesame Street" for my generation.' Not only something that a kid really loves, but something I love for a whole different set of reasons."

Yo Gabba Gabba! Live jumps into a lucrative but competitive family entertainment field that annually fields longtime winners like Dora the Explorer, Sesame Street Live, Clifford the Big Red Dog and others. Luba thinks the rock sensibilities, and the expertise at S2BN, offer a different spin on the genre.

The tour will have a major video element and rock show production values, with former Neil Young lighting director Mike Baldassari designing the lighting rig. "There's a moveable portal which kind of frames it with lights, a giant LED screen which splits in two and moves around, and the rest of the time it's singalong and dance-along with what's going on onstage," Luba says. "It won't look like most kids' shows, and it won't feel like Broadway. It will feel like a party."

Luba says the target demographic for the tour ranges from "newborns all the way up to probably 6 or 7." That type of demo provides the opportunity to market to both kids and parents and to sell four tickets instead of two. Prices range from $33 to $75.

"Yo Gabba Gabba!" host DJ Lance Rock will be on hand for the tour, as will be the show's characters Muno, Foofa, Brobee, Toodee and Plex, as well as as-yet-unidentified musical guests.

"It's up to us to not only let people know the show's coming, but to educate people as to what it's all about so they know what to expect, and then to blow their minds when they get there," Luba says.

Options for touring North America in 2010 are being weighed, and the global touring opportunity for Yo Gabba Gabba! Live seems obvious, given Cohl's background as a global producer.

"The family entertainment market plays right to our strengths," Luba says. "We're glad that we found one that we all really feel passionate about and one we think has a really big run ahead of it." ••••

SACHA BARON COHEN, COMPOSER ERRAN BARON COHEN TO KEYNOTE AT FILM & TV MUSIC CONFERENCE

Sacha Baron Cohen and his brother, composer Erran Baron Cohen, will participate in a keynote panel at the Hollywood Reporter/Billboard Film & TV Music Conference Oct. 29-30 at the Beverly Hilton in Los Angeles.

The siblings will discuss their collaborations on the TV program "Da Ali G Show" and the films "Borat" and "Brüno." The former has grossed $128.5 million in the United States, while "Brüno," which comes out on DVD Nov. 17, has grossed $60 million, according to Box Office Mojo.

Although Sacha Baron Cohen often makes public appearances in the guise of his latest film character, he'll make a rare appearance as himself at the conference. Author/journalist Dan Kimpel will moderate the discussion, presented by ASCAP. ····

Kings Of Bachata

Aventura Is The Latin Music Success Story Of The Year

When members of the urban bachata group Aventura taped a music special at the White House last week, they started to explain their music to President Barack Obama.

According to Aventura manager Johnny Marines, Obama said, "You guys act like I don't know what bachata is."

These days, even if many people still don't know what bachata is, they know Aventura, the group that's taken the traditional music of the Dominican Republic, modernized it with touches of R&B and tropical music and made it the hottest-selling Latin music today.

This week, Aventura's new album, "The Last" (Premium Latin), notches its 15th week at No. 1 on Billboard's Top Latin Albums chart (see En Breve, right) and is the top-selling Latin album of the year so far. The group recently sold out the first of three January shows at Madison Square Garden in just three hours. It also sold out Los Angeles' Staples Center and has added a second show there.

The Aventura phenomenon—the sales, the touring, the exposure in both mainstream and Latin media—makes the group the biggest Latin success story of 2009, on par with Daddy Yankee in 2005.

Which begs the question: What is behind the group's success, and what can be learned from it?

Aventura has risen to prominence in the last four years, but the group has been together for more than a decade. Long signed to the indie label Premium Latin, Aventura developed the sound known as "urban bachata," which other acts have emulated without the same level of success. Early on, Aventura took the Backstreet Boys route to stardom, making it big in Europe first, where its hit "Obsesión" topped pop charts in 2004. Then, when Sony picked up the group for distribution in 2005, U.S. sales exploded.

Sharp-dressed men: AVENTURA

In addition to being a hit with kids, Aventura has connected with women, who like its lyrics about love and romance, while men admire its sense of style and tailored outfits, according to Angelo Schipilliti, national director of live performance for SBS Entertainment, which is presenting the group in New York, Los Angeles and Miami.

"They have charisma, they have the talent, they have something that is urban, but not that urban—they're still traditional," says David LaPointe, owner of LP Marketing & Promotions in Miami Beach. "They have a broader appeal and it combines traditional bachata with poppier elements."

And like Marc Anthony, Aventura's members hail from the Bronx, giving them a home-grown U.S. fan base, according to Sony Music Latin senior VP of commercial and sales Guillermo Page.

The group hasn't been shy about reaching out to new audiences, as it did when it toured last year with Enrique Iglesias. But Aventura has also made sure to stay close to its core fan base. For example, in 2007, after selling out Madison Square Garden the first time, the group embarked on a club tour dubbed La Gira del Pueblo (The Tour of the People) to give back to fans who'd followed it on the club circuit for years.

Even now, Aventura's arena tour, which kicks off in November, is affordably priced, with tickets beginning at $39.

"I just think it's the combination of these four guys who were able to come together," Marines says, "and were able to make this music that just can't be matched." ••••

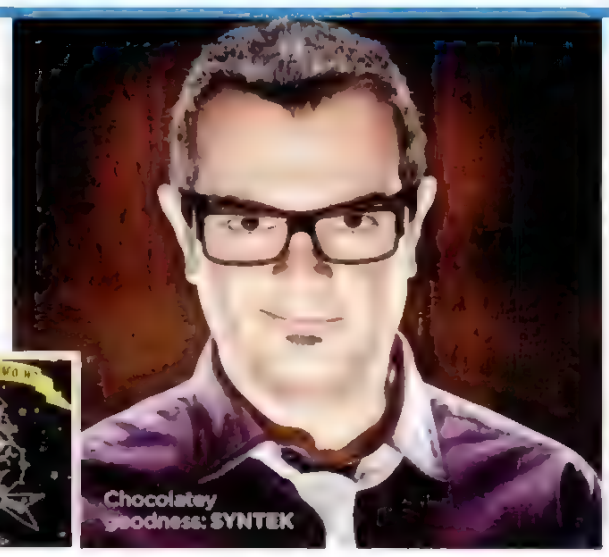
Moderatto, Syntek Star In Mexican Branding Campaigns

Two new branding campaigns in Mexico—one with the rock band Moderatto and the other with the pop star Aleks Syntek—are taking the concept of product integration quite literally. And they're offering the artists and labels more than just free promotion.

To coincide with the Oct. 22 worldwide launch of Microsoft's new Windows 7 operating system, Moderatto will release its new single, "Zodiaco/W7," to radio and include it as a bonus track on its forthcoming hits EP. Listen closely, and you'll hear Windows tones (such as e-mail alerts) incorporated into the song.

"The idea is to accompany the radio promotion with everything that has to do with the promotion of Windows," says EMI Music Mexico marketing director Alfredo Delgadillo. "[It] gives us the opportunity to grow the exposure of the song in all its formats, physically and digitally."



Microsoft bought 120,000 downloads of the song from EMI to give away to consumers at Windows.com.mx and will sponsor a concert by the band early next year, according to Christian Maya, director general of BIR Music Group, the agency that brokered the deal.

Moderatto's manager Federico Ponce de Leon says the deal also included money to produce the song as well as a fee for the band. Another one of his clients, Syntek recorded a song for a Ferrero Rocher chocolates holiday campaign and taped a commercial to air from the end of October until January 2010.

Los Concorde, another act Ponce de Leon manages, licensed two new songs for a Doritos campaign in Mexico, with each song used for two months. "I'll come out with it on the album next year but two songs are already paid for," he says. "Our position is that brands need us too. A lot of people just give away the track . . . [but] my artists are of a certain level."

Even so, Ponce de Leon says, "How many [brands] can do deals like this? Few of them, and that's the reality."

Chocolatey goodness: SYNTEK

Of course, candy makers and software companies can't underwrite the entire music industry. But "there are brands for everyone," says BIR's Maya, whose 2-year-old company works with major labels and indie artists.

"There are brands like Microsoft that have a budget for a band like Moderatto," and those with less money to spend who can work with developing acts, he says. "There has to be a way for [new acts] to be heard too and a way for them to get some income."

>>>SPANISH NAME PIRATE SITES

Spain's anti-piracy umbrella group the Coalition of Creators and Content Industries has delivered a list of 200 Spanish Web sites offering links to unauthorized downloads to the country's industry ministry. That follows the government's recent creation of an inter-ministerial commission to draw up legislation to combat intellectual property violations (Billboard, Oct. 24). According to coalition president Aldo Olcese, the commission is "the first official recognition that we have a problem of grand dimensions," while the list has been forwarded "to facilitate the government's work with the greatest speed."

>>>PIAS STRIKES YOUTUBE DEAL

The Belgium-based Pan-European independent distributor/label group PIAS Entertainment Group has signed a global licensing and marketing deal with YouTube that will enable its label and artist clients to share in revenue from ads that appear wherever their repertoire is used on the service. The deal covers PIAS audio and video releases as well as user-generated content featuring repertoire owned by PIAS-distributed labels. Those labels will now also be able to ask PIAS to remove content they no longer wish to appear on YouTube.

>>>DOMINGO COLLECTS ECHO

Tenor Plácido Domingo collected a lifetime achievement award at the German record industry's 15th annual ECHO Klassik awards, held Oct. 18 at Dresden's Semperoper venue. Other key award winners included mezzo-soprano Elina Garanca, baritone Christian Gerhaher, violinist Anne-Sophie Mutter and pianist David Fray. A jury from the record industry plus selected political, cultural and media figures chose the winners. Organizers say 1.8 million viewers watched a delayed telecast by ZDF TV that evening.

Know Your NME

British Music Weekly Goes Multiplatform

LONDON—Kasabian is in a basement studio filming an online documentary. An hour ago, the alt-rock band was recording a session for radio and TV. Soon it will be on the radio bantering about Oasis before braving the rain for a rooftop magazine photo session.

It may seem like just another day's promo, but all this activity is taking place in one building for a single media outlet: the British music weekly NME, which hopes its multiplatform approach can maximize promotional opportunities for labels—and revive the magazine's fortunes.

"The way our target audience—primarily 15- to 24-year-olds—consume media has changed massively," says NME publishing director Paul Cheal. "Research told us our audience wanted media wherever they were, so our whole strategy revolves around multiple touch points."

NME has been on U.K. newsstands since 1952. The NME.com Web site launched in 1996, followed by NME TV in 2007 and NME Radio in 2008. Combined, the brand has a weekly reach of more than 1 million people, according to Cheal, and is now coordinating artist interviews across all platforms, offering a promotional "one-stop shop." As well as Kasabian's Oct. 7 visit, Manic Street Preachers and Doves have appeared in recent months, with Jamie T and Florence & the Machine booked for future slots.

"NME is very important for us," Kasabian frontman Tom Meighan says. "You've got to try and get as many kids into [our] music as possible and if that means Internet and video [interviews], then all well and good."

While rival U.K. music magazines Kerrang and Q also have TV/radio operations, only NME houses all its platforms in the same location—a significant advantage, according to Kevin McCabe, VP of promotions and press for EMI's Parlophone Records. McCabe recently booked the Hot Rats, featuring Gaz Coombes and Danny Goffey of Supergrass, onto multiple NME platforms.

"They've stolen a march," McCabe says. "Multimedia is the future and the more things they can put in one building the easier it is for labels. For the right act, it's a no-brainer."

But while the brand is flourishing, the magazine's average weekly circulation during the first six months of 2009 was just 40,948, down 27.2% from the same period last year, according to the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

Cheal says the magazine remains "the heartbeat of the whole brand proposition" and its "leading profit generator." But he says "stabilizing the circulation is an immediate objective" for new editor Krissi Murison, who took over Sept. 1 after returning from a brief stint in New York as music director of Nylon. She had previously been at NME from 2003 until February of this year.

Murison plans a design revamp in February 2010 and says immediate editorial changes include a "subtle" broadening of the magazine's scope.

"NME has to start behaving like a weekly music magazine again," she says. "Five years ago, all the most exciting music was coming from the guitar scene, but that's less the case now."

NME failed to make the top 10 in Billboard's recent Maximum Exposure survey of the United Kingdom's most successful platforms for music promotion (Billboard, Sept. 26). But Murison says the brand remains "absolutely influential," citing its early support for acts like La Roux and Florence & the Machine.

EMI's McCabe says declining circulation is an issue for marketing and promo departments, but he praises Murison's initial changes. "It's about making the print side relevant again," he says. "If she can get the feature writing right, then they've got a shot."

Murison, meanwhile, maintains that the magazine's appeal remains as strong as ever.

"If you ask bands [what they choose] if they could be on the cover of any magazine in the world, it's always NME," she says. "It's the one that means the most to people."

UNSUNG STARS

Effort To Organize Bollywood Playback Singers Stumbles

BANGALORE, India—The singers behind India's Bollywood musicals appear to have lost another chance to establish a collective voice.

In mid-September, Indian media reported the launch of Performers Syndicate Ltd., which had planned to lobby on behalf of "playback" singers to secure them royalties long denied them by the Indian entertainment industry. Playback singers provide vocals for Bollywood musical stars.

But just weeks later, PSL looks dead in the water. The initiative "has been called off due to internal differences between its members," says prominent playback singer Kunal Ganjawala, one of PSL's founders.

Ganjawala insists PSL was never a formal entity, saying that "a couple of us discussed over the phone creating a syndicate for such causes, but were yet to formally meet."

PSL CEO Shahid Rafi—the son of one of India's best-known playback singers, the late Mohammed Rafi—didn't respond to requests for comment. A prominent singer involved in the effort, who asked to remain anonymous, says press coverage portraying the PSL as fighting for performers' rights has strained his relationship with labels.

Even in piracy-ravaged India, Bollywood soundtracks sell millions of copies annually, accounting for 71% of India's $140 million in recorded-music sales in 2008, according to the labels group the Indian Music Industry.

Except for a handful of huge stars, playback singers receive one-off recording payments from film companies, which strike their own soundtrack deals with labels.

PSL hoped to win singers royalties from record sales and payment for their recordings' public performance. At present, that performance right isn't covered by India's 1957 Copyright Act. But if introduced, such a provision could open up new revenue streams for international and Indian artists alike.

Atul Churamani, VP of the leading Indian label Saregama, insists record companies can do nothing unless the law changes. "How much is to be paid to the singers has [never] been spelled out," he says.

"We already buy the music from producers at a high cost—and selling the product is itself a challenging task in today's market," says Adarsh Gupta, CEO of another leading label, Times Music. "So sharing revenue with the singer doesn't arise."

But others disagree. Kulmeet Makkar, CEO of BIG Music & Home Entertainment, which releases Bollywood soundtracks and videos, says, "Why should record labels oppose this move? If the [legal] position changes, I do not see labels having any issue with directing payment to its rightful owners."

While a 1995 amendment to the 1957 act established performers' rights to block the release of unauthorized recordings, it didn't set out any provision for paying royalties. Nevertheless, "the current setup vis-à-vis performers' rights largely has a lot to do with how business is conducted, rather than the act itself," says Ameet Dutta, a senior advocate with copyright experience at the law firm Luthra & Luthra in New Delhi.

Dutta adds that the situation reflects the lack of strong association "that can collectively withstand the film producer/music company lobby."

PSL was the second attempt in recent years to do just that. In 2006, leading Bollywood singer Sonu Niigaam set up the Singer's Association of India, but internal rifts meant that project was also stillborn.

"Film producers and music companies are powerful [and] taking advantage of the situation," Niigaam says. "Whatever contract singers enter into with film producers, [they] must get their share of royalties."

There remains widespread enthusiasm for a lobbying organization. "We should have a common platform to raise our issues," says Shilpa Rao, a leading young playback singer. "And this platform should also ensure that, if we take the protest path, there should be no loss of business."

THE BILLBOARD Q&A

BY ANN DONAHUE

TV AND FILM PRODUCER/ MUSIC SUPERVISOR

Jonathan McHugh

The film/TV music vet says budget constraints are pushing music supervisors into new roles.

When it comes to film and TV music, Jonathan McHugh has a dream résumé. He worked on the soundtracks to "Empire Records" and "Austin Powers: International Man of Mystery." He was the music supervisor for cult indie films like "Roger Dodger" and "Rize." He even played a label executive in a bit part in Snoop Dogg's 2006 film "Hood of Horror."

In recent years, however, as "head chef" of his own company, Song Stew Entertainment, McHugh has found himself moving away from traditional film/TV music jobs. He got that cameo in "Hood of Horror," for example, because he was also the film's writer/producer. He also produced the 2008 film "Repo! The Genetic Opera" and the reality TV show "Battleground Earth: Ludacris vs. Tommy Lee," which aired on Discovery's Planet Green channel.

One reason for moving to film and TV production, he says, is adapting to the economic times. With the music industry in a slump—and film studios and TV networks putting more pressure on music budgets for major productions—expanding to new jobs is a necessity.

McHugh will speak at the Hollywood Reporter/Billboard Film and TV Music conference, held Oct. 29-30 at the Beverly Hilton in Los Angeles, about his journey from music supervisor to movie producer. In an interview, he explains why he anticipates more of his colleagues will follow in his footsteps by diversifying their skills.

Why did you branch out into writing and producing?

My mother was a novelist, my father is a wood sculptor. My brother is still, to this day, a 50-plus-year-old folk singer. So I grew up in this really creative family. As I became an executive and got out of college and got into college radio and radio syndication—always promoting other people's things—I started writing scripts and I got a movie made ["Hood of Horror"]. It was like, all of a sudden, you realize you can do both—you have the left brain and the right brain. You can promote other people's stuff and keep promoting your own stuff.

And this is what independent people need to do now to survive.

Look, I love music supervision, I love putting songs to pictures. But what I also love is producing, where you help create something from conception—not just the music, but the whole process. Once you've built up 25 years of relationships and skills, it's really not that hard. It's a question of finding the gig that gets you in there. That's why reality TV is interesting, because it moves so quickly. When you love a lot of different things, you want to keep doing them. You have to build up and have different skill sets that can bridge the gap—that's what needs to be done in today's world.

So how did "Battleground Earth," your reality TV show, come together?

Leslie Greif produced [A&E's "Gene Simmons: Family Jewels"] and he was engaged by a new green network called Planet Green to create a show. Steve Jones, who is now the show runner on the Discovery show "Pitchmen," called me and said, "I think this would be perfect for you. We need some talent: a rocker and a rapper." And we ended up getting Ludacris and Tommy Lee and created a series that was nine different weeks of environmental challenges across the country that their teams had to compete in. It was great because not only were you on TV, but you were doing something good. We got letters from teachers that said, "We usually don't do anything about TV, but we had our kids watch your show every week." I got rid of the BMW and got a hybrid. [laughs]

Around this same time, you were working on a feature film, "Repo! The Genetic Opera." Talk a bit about that.

That was one of the greatest and worst experiences of my life. You spend a year-and-a-half on this movie—it's a horror movie and a musical. We got everybody from Nivek Ogre from Skinny Puppy to Sarah Brightman to Paul Sorvino to Paris Hilton. Because of Paris Hilton, we got in Time magazine and Rolling Stone. But we also got, "Well, you got Paris Hilton in your movie—your movie sucks." The payoff is when you go see that movie now in a midnight show and people are all dressed up and screaming at the screen and talking back to the movie. It's a new "Rocky Horror"—and "Rocky Horror" obviously stiffed when it came out, too. You realize that you gave birth to a freaky little child, but that freaky little child may grow up to be something.

And now you're working on an animated short film based on a Facebook app?

My friend Yair Landau ran the digital animation group [at Sony Pictures] and produced "Surf's Up," "Open Season" and "Cloudy With a Chance of Meatballs," which was just a big hit. His idea was that animation was a big monster that was impossible to enter. So he hooked up with Intel and they [used] their amateur animation software Maya—we had 27 different animators all contribute through Facebook. All these people got $500 a pop and a chance to be in an animated feature—it's called crowdsource animation.

The idea for the short is that this guitar gets put in this used instrument store and hears the sound of a violin in the front room and falls in love and has to get to the front room—all to the tune of "Smoke on the Water." Yair's like, "We need a guitar that can talk." I said, "We need someone big: Steve Vai." Steve said he didn't want to do scores anymore because he didn't like his work tweaked by directors, and I said, "This is different. No, you are the movie. You are the star . . . and I need a violin." And he has this girl in his band, Ann Marie Calhoun—she won the My Grammy Moment [in 2008]. She's an incredible, beautiful, wonderful spirit. We cast these two and now [the short is] opening for the Sony film "Planet 51," which is due out at Thanksgiving.

You have another reality TV show in the works called "Crash Course to Stardom."

That's something we're putting together now—we haven't shopped it yet. The music business isn't dead—the record business has problems—but the dream is so much alive. If you go to Guitar Center, the place is packed. It's really a way to help people through our network of individuals that have spent a lot of time in the business.

This new band Bascom Hill, we went to see them at Summerfest in Milwaukee and they were just OK. And then we listened to their music, and I thought, "These guys are great, they really have potential." And then you find out they've never been schooled—if you're living in Racine or Milwaukee, Wis., who is going to tell you this [industry] stuff? We think it's a viable concept—kids want to see what happens in the business.

And in a different way than "American Idol."

Right. "American Idol" is the king of it all, but there are other people in the court still interested in seeing how the game works. ••••

> When you love a lot of different things, you want to keep doing them. You have to build up and have different skill sets.

New Moon' Rising

'TWILIGHT' GOT TEENAGE BLOOD PUMPING. NOW ATLANTIC GOES IN FOR THE KILL WITH A SEQUEL'S SOUNDTRACK FEATURING DEATH CAB FOR CUTIE AND THOM YORKE

BY ANN DONAHUE • PHOTOGRAPH BY RYAN RUSSELL

ust in case you've been in a sight-, sound- and Twitter-deprivation tank for the past two years, iere's the lowdown on the "Twilight" franchise: It's a series of four books written by Stephe- ie Meyer about Bella, a human girl who hearts Edward, a vampire boy. This is awkward, due o Edward's predilection for snacking on platelets, but also because high school relationships re invariably angsty and messy. • The first of the series, "Twilight," became a feature film tarring bed-headed porcelain heartthrob Robert Pattinson, and made almost $400 million ast year at box offices around the world for its fledgling movie studio, Summit Entertainnent. The accompanying soundtrack, featuring Paramore, Muse, Linkin Park—and a rather ovely track by Pattinson himself—sold 2.2 million copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

On Nov. 20, the adaptation of the econd book in the series, "The Twiight Saga: New Moon," hits theaters. ut more than one month before—n Oct. 16—Atlantic/Chop Shop ecords released the soundtrack, umped up from Oct. 20 after the bum leaked on the Internet. In its rst three days of sales, the soundack sold 115,000, copies, according Nielsen SoundScan, landing it at o. 2 on the Billboard 200.

For the next three months, Atlantic ants to make the "New Moon" soundack inescapable. The label is teamg with teen lifestyle all-stars to romote the album: Hot Topic, MTV id MySpace. For those too old to wear lack nail polish, the soundtrack also ill be sold at Whole Foods, Nordstrom's, Hallmark and Hollyood Video.

But besides its omnipresence, there's a secret weapon the bel is deploying for "New Moon." The soundtrack features acks from Thom Yorke, Bon Iver & St. Vincent, Lykke Li and ea Wolf, among others—and they're all exclusive to the album.

"We had offers from artists that were incredibly wonderful id incredibly commercial, and it would have been easy to y, 'Oh, let's go for it because we'll sell more records'—but wouldn't have been true to the project," says Paul Katz, ounder/CEO of Eye2Ear Music, which consults with Sumit Entertainment on music; Katz produced the soundtrack bum and has been involved since the script stage to determine where music could fit into the film.

The track list mediates the one bit of risk to the "Twilight" eries: So far, the franchise owes its popularity to the capricious ushes of teenage girls. Getting "Twihards" who love virtuous ampires to buy the soundtrack is easy—but getting Radiohead ns to plunk down cash for a little bit of the "New Moon" unierse will be a coup.

"Keeping it as a combination of obviously great artists—but making it interesting for people to discover—was a very carefully considered view," Katz says.

HE WOLF

As "New Moon" opens, there's a complication in the story of our star-crossed lovers: While Bella may love Edward forever and ever—eh, Edward thinks it's best to take a break. Enter boy-next-door Jacob, who—in the grand narrative tradition of mystical Native Americans—is a werewolf.

This love triangle forms the plot of "New Moon," and accordingly the soundtrack is moody and wistful, but with an undercurrent of strum und drang machismo. Each song is exclusive to the soundtrack, as-yet-unreleased, and most were written specifically for the movie, remixed or given new lyrics to fit the film's themes. "I was very inspired by the John Hughes movies of the '80s, which made me listen to indie rock bands that probably weren't meant for 13-year-olds: Yello, the Psychedelic Furs, New Order," says music supervisor Alexandra Patsavas, who also produced the album, as she did for the soundtrack to "Twilight." "Hopefully we can create a similar moment in time for 2009 teenagers."

Patsavas received coffins and Dracula pictures in her South Pasadena, Calif., office from bands trying to get her to listen to their tracks for inclusion on the "New Moon" soundtrack. "The big difference between the last album and this album is that the last album we really had to go out there and beg and plead for the first album and for this one, it was completely the reverse," Katz says.

The first single is Death Cab for Cutie's "Meet Me on the Equinox," currently No. 15 on the Alternative chart. The song debuted on MTV.com Sept. 13 in tandem with the Video Music Awards; the music video, a sepia-toned intermingling of the band with footage from the movie, debuted Oct. 7.

"With Death Cab we felt like they were hip enough, they were cool enough, and they were musical enough and broad enough without being super commercial super pop," Katz says. "And one thing Summit is cognizant of, when we choose an artist—and they choose us, it's a mutual thing—is that we want enthusiasm."

And Death Cab is nothing if not enthusiastic about discussing the travails of Bella, Edward and Jacob (see story, page 21). It can follow in the footsteps of the singer of the "Twilight" soundtrack's first single: Paramore's Hayley Williams, who blogged relentlessly about the series on the band's Web site, posting pictures of herself holding the books and attending the movie's premiere. Her fan-girl joy caught on; the "Twilight" soundtrack significantly boosted Paramore's profile with its single from the album, "Decode," selling 927,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

"Paramore did a fantastic job for us—and for them," Katz says. "We want somebody who will feel really good about being involved in the project and talk it up."

But the plan is to work "New Moon" like a traditional album, with several singles being released. Two contenders for the next single slot are Lykke Li's "Possibility," which is the longest musical take in the movie and played over a pivotal scene in the film as Bella pines for Edward, or the Killers' "A White Demon Love Song."

Patsavas has a longstanding relationship with Atlantic—her imprint, Chop Shop Records, is affiliated with Atlantic, and "New Moon" artist Anya Marina is signed to it—but ultimately the soundtrack's tone was a group effort. Marina, for instance, was selected by director Chris Weitz after Patsavas, looking to boost the number of female vocalists on the soundtrack, sent him a compilation CD with 15 female artists. Marina's cover of T.I.'s "Whatever You Like" won him over.

"[Patsavas] doesn't get force-fed priorities to follow because they're going to be big songs," says Livia Tortella, GM/executive VP of marketing and creative media at Atlantic. "She starts with the feeling of the film and then she creates a mood around it. I can't tell her, 'Oh, you've got to use this band because it's a priority.' I've got to give her a band that's going to fit the mood she's creating and also has a bit of a base so I can open up the film. They're about the mood, about the feeling of it, and that's really exciting because it's really creative."

The Yorke track came about after Patsavas established the relationship by licensing the Radiohead track "15 Step" for the end credits of "Twilight." "Early on in the summer I was speaking quite a bit to [Bryce Edge, Yorke's manager] and he said Thom had something already recorded that would be appropriate for the movie," Patsavas says. "I was thrilled."

Patsavas' credentials are well-established—she's the music supervisor for "Gossip Girl" and "The OC"—but the music for the "Twilight" series also receives invaluable support from Meyer, the books' author. The fourth novel in the series, "Breaking Dawn," is dedicated to Muse, which appears on both soundtracks. "They are super important to the 'Twilight' family," Patsavas says.

Meyer writes on her blog at StephenieMeyer.com about what music she listened to while writing the novels. Her site now includes streams of her suggested songs, as well as links to purchase ringtones. "You start out with a [reading] experience that people are so excited about and she's such a passionate lover of music, so it has her stamp all over it," Tortella says. "The music is like a character with a life of its own, and Stephenie gave birth to that."

Since Meyer wrote "Twilight" in 2005 and started singing the praises of Muse, the band has seen steady sales in the United States, according to Nielsen SoundScan; when the track "Supermassive Black Hole" was placed on the "Twilight" soundtrack, the band's popularity jumped. In the six months leading up to the release of "Twilight," Muse's 2006 album "Black Holes and Revelations" sold 41,000 copies, according to SoundScan. In the six months following the film's U.S. bow, the set sold 73,000—up 78.5% compared with the pre-"Twilight" week.

"Supermassive Black Hole" had already peaked on the Alternative radio airplay chart at No. 6 in September 2007. In the track's two-and-a-half years of release before the "Twilight" film's debut, it had sold 154,000 downloads. In the 11 months since the film hit screens, the track sold another 310,000.

"Some time ago, when the band was playing in Arizona, we invited [Meyer] to a show," says Muse's manager, Q Prime's Cliff Burnstein. " 'Twilight' director Catherine Hardwicke wanted to use 'Supermassive' in a very long scene, with not a lot of dialogue in the foreground. We thought, 'This is fun; this is a nice woman who writes these books, she's a fan of ours, let's get involved in this.' No one was really thinking at the time, 'This is a huge opportunity.' "

The "New Moon" soundtrack features a remix of Muse's "I Belong to You" that was rerecorded to emphasize the track's guitars and takes out the French opera interlude in the original version. "[The band] loved the change they made, Chris [Weitz] was really pleased, Alex was really pleased, and at the last minute we were able to get it into the movie," Burnstein says.

The soundtrack also features a track by score composer and multiple Academy Award nominee Alexandre Desplat. (The score from "Twilight" was by Carter Burwell on Atlantic, and sold 182,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan, a fantastic sales number for a score; it's the 11th-biggest-selling soundtrack of 2009. A label deal for the "New Moon" score is still pending.) Weitz asked Desplat for a sweeping, romantic score—along the lines of what Maurice Jarre did for "Doctor Zhivago."

"There is a central love theme for Bella and Edward, but Chris felt that we didn't want to put that out front because in the film Bella and Edward are separated through much of it," Desplat says. "You don't hear that theme in its full treatment until the end of the movie. For the soundtrack album it's an arrangement of that melody but just for piano."

Katz is mulling hiring a songwriter and an artist to create and record lyrics to the piece, and then release it as a single—much like the teaming of Bryan Adams, Mutt Lange and composer Michael Kamen on the 1991 film "Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves."

It all speaks to a broader theme of the soundtrack: It's more than just a souvenir of the movie—it's an album that can be worked to radio along the lines of a traditional artist release. "We see the soundtrack as an entity in its own right, which obviously you can't say about every soundtrack," he says.

YOU'RE SO VEIN

It's hard to overemphasize the impact the "Twilight" series has had on the cultural conversation. In recent days, Ryan Seacrest has been doing dramatic readings of sections of "New Moon" during his morning radio show and posting the videos of his candlelit performances on his Web site.

It makes the soundtrack a safe bet as a slam-dunk—digital sales already launched Anya Marina to No. 22 on Billboard's Heatseekers Songs chart, as her "Satellite Heart" was offered as an immediate download from the soundtrack with a preorder from iTunes—but it also makes its success hard to replicate. "With 'Twilight' and 'New Moon,' people are buying into the whole experience," Tortella says. "They want to own it."

Of the 2.2 million copies of the "Twilight" soundtrack sold in the United States, 1.7 million were physical CDs and 521,000 were digital downloads, according to Nielsen SoundScan. (Except for the Paramore track "Decode," the tracks on the album weren't available a la carte on iTunes.) Part of the reason for the popularity of the physical format among young buyers may be the goodies that were packed into each CD—and Atlantic is repeating that strategy for "New Moon."

Each CD will contain a poster of the film's characters, and there will be different editions that contain a variety of bonus tracks of songs in the film that didn't make the album, including Lupe Fiasco's "Solar Midnite," the Magic Numbers and Amadou & Mariam's "All I Believe In" and two classical tracks.

There will be CDs available with merch—look for "New Moon" T-shirts for your gothy teen at fye this holiday season—and, for the first time, the soundtrack will be available for $32.99 as a USB drive sculpted into the family crest of the Cullens, Edward's vampire family.

Besides placing the soundtrack in nontraditional retailers to take advantage of the holiday season, the label is unveiling a Hot Topic tour Nov. 6, with various bands from the soundtrack making appearances during a 15-market trek. Besides performances, the tour includes signings in Hot Topic and Q&A sessions in the mall where the stores are located.

"The first volume really centered a lot around Paramore," Tortella says. "This one is really about showing the depth of it and the mood of it by having a bunch of artists participate in events."

Death Cab will appear on "Jimmy Kimmel Live!" and at mtvU's Woodie Awards. In addition, the soundtrack will be promoted in onscreen advertising in movie theaters and a primetime TV campaign during Thanksgiving weekend.

Online, MySpace is the soundtrack's key partner, debuting the soundtrack listing, Marina's single and then streaming the soundtrack in full. The film's first trailer also premiered on the site—and received 4.2 million views in the first 24 hours.

The "New Moon" soundtrack also will receive a push internationally, with Spain, France, Germany, Australia, Japan and Mexico getting bonus tracks from local artists in their native language on the soundtrack. In Mexico—where "Twilight" is known as "Crepúsculo"—the soundtrack to the first movie went to No. 5 on the Mexican albums chart and went gold, selling at least 40,000 copies, according to the Mexican labels association Amprofon.

"The fun part about having a franchise like this is it's the experience of the music and the experience of the film that really drives a lot of the ideas," Tortella says.

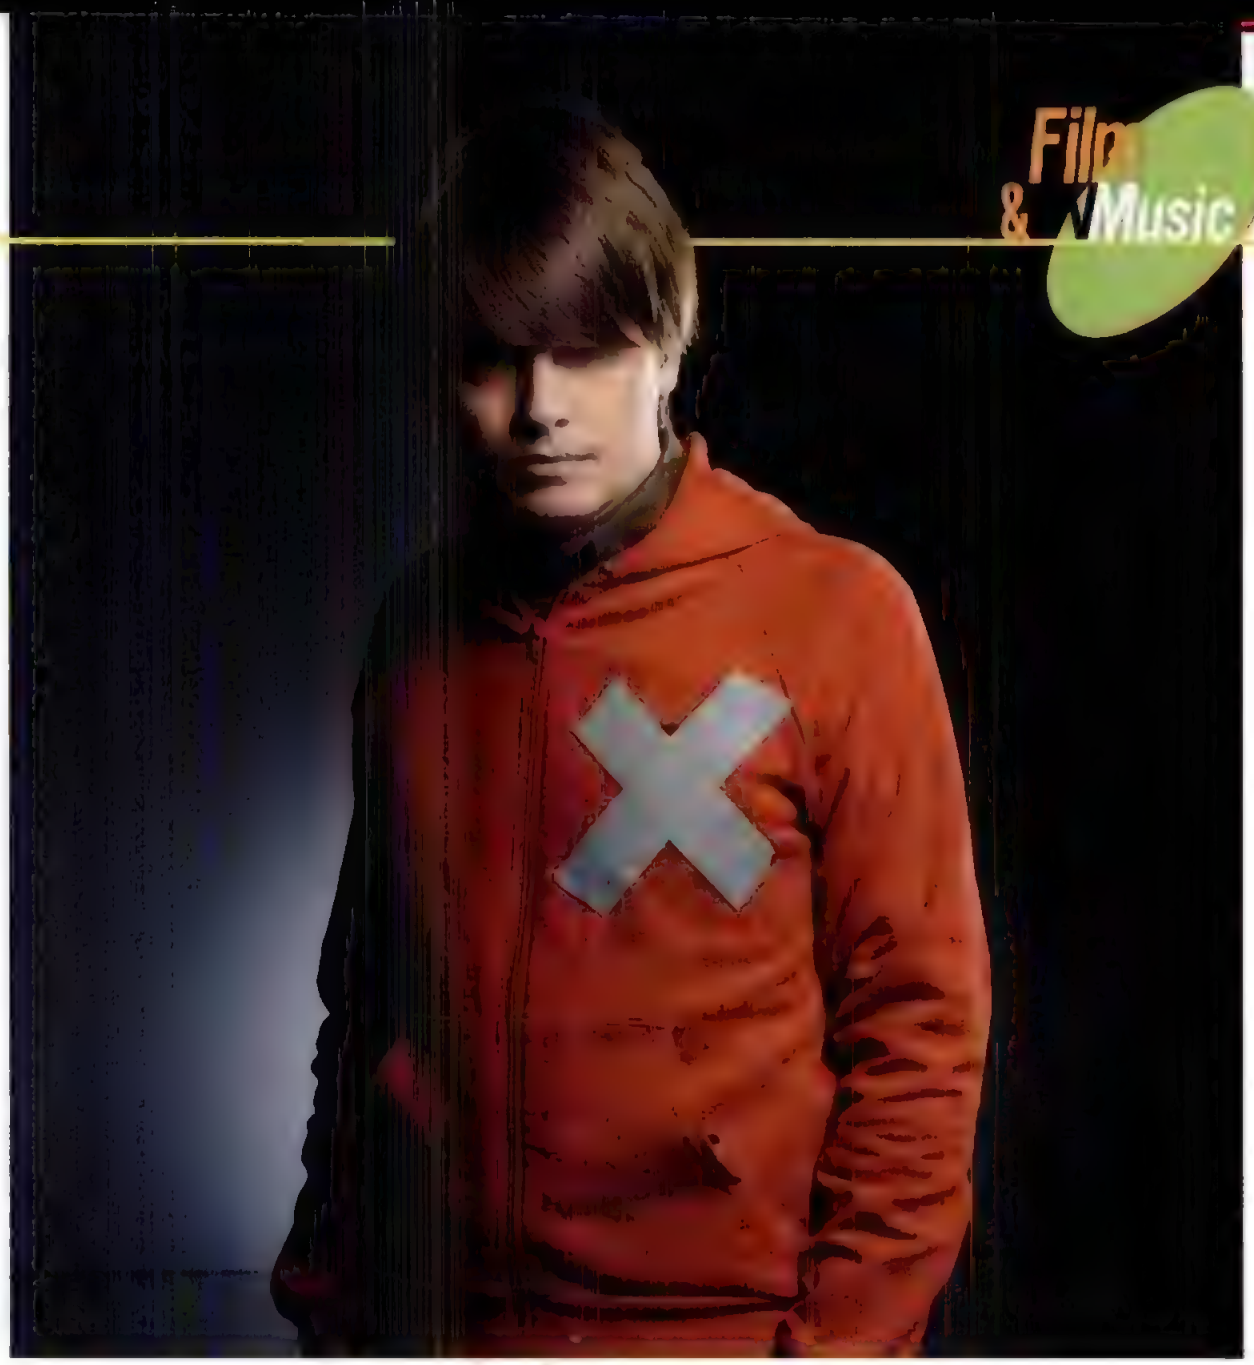
FANGS FOR THE MEMORIES

As for the film itself, there's more music in it than "Twilight" it features roughly 20 cues, Weitz says. "The movie has a lot spots for music and a lot of spots for score, and we're trying ride a very delicate balance and not make it wall-to-wall carpe ing," he says. "I think there is a threat to modern film in th there's not enough silence. And so it's very rare you actual get to hear the entire song played out." The one song that do play in full during the film, he says, is Yorke's "Hearing Dan age," which underscores a fight scene.

Weitz is well-known for pushing music in his movies; h was a producer on last year's "Nick & Norah's Infinite Playlis and he was nominated for an Oscar for best adapted scree play for the 2002 music-intensive film "About a Boy." "He's g good musical taste and he's very into it," Katz says. "He wasn just like he was the director out there, he was part of the team

So to address the question fluttering in a million teenage gi hearts: Why does Pattinson not make an appearance on the se ond soundtrack?

The answer: He didn't want to. (Sorry, girls.) "We asked Rob wanted to do it, but his music is kind of his private stuff a way—as opposed to this huge public dazzle on him on th moment," Katz says. "We wanted to respect that. If he come to us on the third one and he wants to do something, then w would obviously be delighted."



Right now Pattinson is filming "Eclipse"—the third book the "Twilight" series—in Canada in preparation for a release summer 2010. Katz and Patsavas are back onboard for the soun track album, and while a deal with a record label isn't finalize yet, Katz says, "We would like to work with Atlantic again."

The plot of "Eclipse" provides more rich sonic territory, i cluding a vampire versus werewolf battle and lots of chas "ragged breathing" between Bella and her supernatural bo toys. In other words, it adheres to the same formula that ha sold 70 million copies of Meyer's books worldwide, accordi to the publisher, Hachette Book Group—an alchemy of ho mones and horror that spawned films and soundtracks to fee off the stories' success.

"There's no illusion that it wasn't the 'Twilight' phenom non that helped make it so successful," Katz says. "While th music is great, if it came out by itself, it wouldn't have the san impact at all."

THE BILLBOARD Q&A:

Chris Walla

BY CORTNEY HARDING

Chances are, most tweens watching the video for Death Cab for Cutie's "Meet Me on the Equinox," the first single from the "New Moon" soundtrack, will fast forward right past the band to get to the scene of Robert Pattison sans shirt. But it's their loss, because they'll be missing out on one of the band's practically patented heartbroken indie rock ballads. • Guitarist Chris Walla and his bandmates (frontman Ben Gibbard, bassist Nick Harmer and drummer Jason McGerr) have had a hell of a trip. Founded in the late '90s in Bellingham, Wash., the group captured a solid indie following before becoming the unofficial soundtrack for sensitive dudes everywhere on "The OC" and signing to Atlantic Records. Stints on "Saturday Night Live" and a chart-topping album, the 2008 "Narrow Stairs," followed in due course. • Now the group is part of one of the most highly anticipated soundtracks in recent history, appearing on "New Moon" alongside the Killers and Thom Yorke. Walla chatted about his love of the campy, vampy novels, as well as his current production work.

Did you write "Meet Me on the Equinox" specifically for the soundtrack, or was it something you had lying around that you thought would work well with the film?

A bit of both. The song was already written, and then it got tweaked a fair bit to make it work for this. When we first started working on this, Ben [Gibbard] sent about 10 demos he thought might work, and while nine of them ended up not feeling quite right, one was eerily perfect.

That said, it definitely needed retooling, and there was a real concern about the timing. Ben just got married, Nick was in the middle of a cross-country move, and Jason has a 1-year-old he's barely seen because we've been on tour so much. We came to the conclusion that we were going to devote three days to this, and if it worked, great. And we figured if it didn't work, at least we had a great song for the next record. But it has worked out beautifully—it's really been kind of perfect.

You've read some of the books. Why do you think the "Twilight" series has taken off in such a massive way?

I didn't have a clue how big this was until I told my 18-year-old cousin and she was like [squeals], "OMG! OMG! OMG!" It was amazing. It was nuts. Part of what makes the books great is that they have this teenage-girl-diary quality to them; it's strangely believable and it works. [Author] Stephenie Meyer really got in touch with her inner 17-year-old to make it happen. I think that's part of the reason why it works for boys too; it's a weird instructional manual in a way.

Is this the first movie soundtrack you've worked on? You've been part of TV soundtracks, but why have you held off on film until now?

Right, we have never done a film. When the "OC" thing happened a while back, we went through a whole host of emotions. When we got the first request for that, they hadn't even aired the pilot, and we said, "Sure, why not." It was one of the first licensing things we did and we didn't think it would be a big deal. For a while after it got huge, we thought, "God, we're the 'OC' band forever, stuck in this box." But we realized it was only a chapter in the band's history, and we had albums and a fan base and it wouldn't be the only thing we ever did.

In terms of "New Moon," part of it was the fact that Nick [Harmer] and I were clued in to this, and I really love the series, and there's some real enjoyment to be had from being part of something that is such a part of the cultural zeitgeist. But I'll also say I'm a little weirded out about being a 33-year-old man heading into this teeny, tweeny promo campaign.

Are you going to have to hang out at Hot Topic for five hours while teenage girls rip your hair out?

Well, we're not starring in the film, so I feel a little safer, but I guess there is a level of guilt by association. We will be doing some promo, I'm sure. Part of me is excited because being in a big band, I've been able to do some really awesome stuff, but I want to make sure we're not signing up for anything too bizarre. We've gotten some requests that sound excellent, and some of them are like, "Oh, God, no, we're never doing that."

Like what? Are you going to be on a lunch box?

There is a lot of product placement and retail tie-ins, although I don't think we're going to be on a lunch box. [laughs] I think the thing that's most exciting for me is the fact that being part of this, I'm able to feel like I'm 15 again and think back to some of the soundtracks that were really big for me.

The way they are building this whole franchise is really one of those modern, 360-degree cultural assaults. So if "Meet Me on the Equinox" winds up in the credits, or as part of a very pivotal scene, it will remind whoever loves the movie of that moment every time they hear it. That's great for us and it's good for the movie.

Is there a full Death Cab album coming soon?

It's downtime right now, but at some point early next year I think we're going to dive in and start working on stuff. We're going to be more laid-back about it; while all our other albums have been recorded on a strict schedule, for the next one, we'll get together for a week-and-a-half or two weeks and we'll be in the studio and kind of see what happens. We've never done it before, but we feel like we finally have the luxury to do that.

You also did production on the new Tegan & Sara album, and you've released solo projects in the past. Are you working on any other personal projects?

It's all record-making, all the time right now. I'm working with lots of bands who are kind of just starting out, or have made one record, or haven't even made a full-length [album]. I'm really loving it, because I remember what it's like to be starting out, and it's really cool to be around that kind of energy. I'm going to do a record with this band called the Lonely Forest, from Seattle. They're an awesome, really blue-collar rock band with a Superchunk vibe and great energy onstage. ••••

Behind The Music Placements

MUSIC SUPERVISORS AND EXECUTIVES TELL THE STORIES BEHIND THE YEAR'S TOP 10 SYNCHS • BY ANN DONAHUE

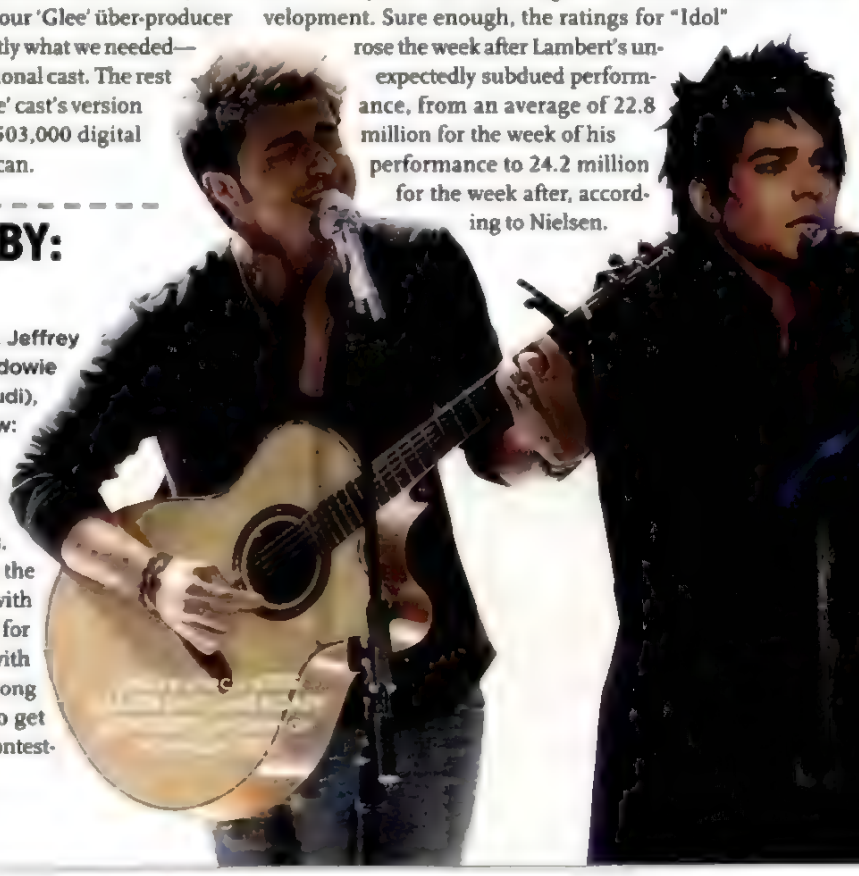
Getting a song placed in a TV show or film takes a certain kind of serendipity: The right song needs the support of the right music supe: sor and executive to end up in the right storyline at the right time—and then, well, the rights have to be available and affordable. • 2009 v a year when the film/TV music industry took some chances—and saw some big payoffs in terms of creative accolades and sales. Here list of the film/TV music teams whose choices made the most impact.

MUSIC SUPERVISOR: PJ BLOOM

Executive: Executive producer Ryan Murphy /// Song: "Don't Stop Believin' " /// Songwriters: Jonathan Cain, Steve Perry, Neal Schon /// Show: "Glee"

Every Wednesday night after "Glee" airs, digital sales of the tracks featured on the show explode, and at least two songs are featured in every episode. The potential for the show's music to be a digital sales success was apparent immediately after its premiere following the "American Idol" finale in May. "Once Ryan [Murphy] committed to making 'Don't Stop' our signature song for the pilot, we needed to engage the process of turning one of the greatest pop/rock songs of all time into one of the soon-to-be greatest 'Glee' songs of all time," Bloom says. "Since we hadn't cast our actors yet, this resulted in no less than 20 different demo versions created by two different producers sung by everyone from the top session vocalists in town to Journey cover band frontmen. In the end, our 'Glee' über-producer Adam Anders managed to create exactly what we needed—which in turn was sung by our exceptional cast. The rest is show choir history." So far, the 'Glee' cast's version of "Don't Stop Believin' " has sold 503,000 digital copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

(TIE) PERFORMED BY: KRIS ALLEN



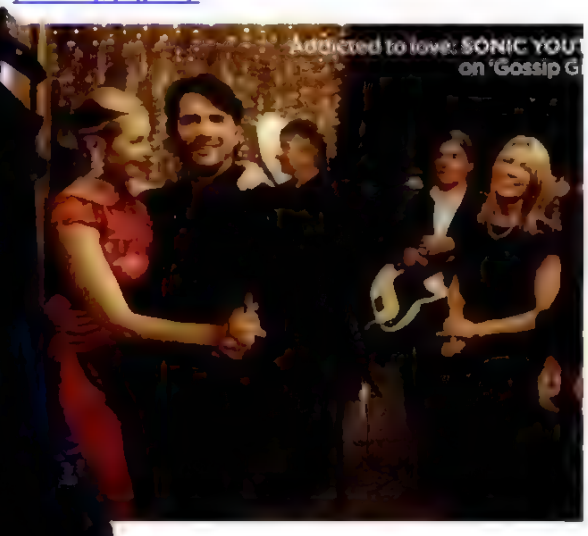
Song: "Heartless" /// Songwriters: Jeffrey Bhasker, Malik Jones, Benjamin McIldowie (Mr. Hudson), Scott Mescudi (Kid Cudi), Kanye West, Ernest Wilson /// Show: "American Idol"

One performance can make someone the favorite to win "American Idol"—and lead to extraordinary digital sales. Here's how song selection works on the program: Contestants are provided with a list of songs that have been cleared for use on the show. If they don't click with one immediately, they can suggest a song that the show's staff will then try to get cleared. Ultimately, however, it's the contestants that make the final choice as to what they perform on Tuesday nights. For Allen, doing a cover of West's "Heartless"—with a tinge of how the song was covered by the Fray—launched him from the cute, competent contestant in the glitter glare of Adam Lambert to the front-runner. Digital sales of the song back it up: 304,000, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

(TIE) PERFORMED BY: ADAM LAMBERT

Artist: Adam Lambert /// Song: "Mad World" /// Original artist: Roland Orzabal /// Show: "American Idol"

Showcasing Glambert's softer side won him new fans and showed why "American Idol" is still relevant. Up until he performed a rendition of "Mad World"—more of an homage to Gary Jules' haunting version than Tears for Fears' poppy slow burn of a tune—Lambert had his pipes turned up to 11, week after week. By toning it down, he kept the audience surprised and underscored what's so compelling about "American Idol": It's a reality show that makes great TV out of actual artist development. Sure enough, the ratings for "Idol" rose the week after Lambert's unexpectedly subdued performance, from an average of 22.8 million for the week of his performance to 24.2 million for the week after, according to Nielsen.



MUSIC SUPERVISOR: ALEXANDRA PATSAVAS

Executives: Executive producer Josh Schwartz and Stephanie Savage /// Artists: Sonic Youth the Plasticines, Albert Hammond Jr., Lady Gaga /// Show "Gossip Girl"

Getting screen time on a show that's all about flash and glar makes artists memorable. Out of the first 10 episodes of "Gos sip Girl" this season, four of them will feature acts on camera Sonic Youth, the Plasticines, Albert Hammond Jr. and Lad Gaga. The week that Sonic Youth appeared—admittedly, a part of a ratings-boosting wedding episode—the number c "Gossip Girls" viewers rose from 2 million the week prior t 2.5 million, according to Nielsen. Making frequent opportu nities for artist appearances is part of the show's design, Pa savas says. "It always comes about when Stephanie and Jos outline the episode and we work in the live performances, Patsavas says. "Lady Gaga shot yesterday—and I can't talk abou the plot, but it is spectacular." (The Gaga episode will air i about a month.) It's Patsavas' talent for matching the tone c a film/TV project with the tenor of the music that has won he devotees: "I'm a complete square and a musical illiterate fo the most part, so I was kind of a blank slate that she could sor of throw things on," says Chris Weitz, director of "New Moon (see story, page 19).

EXECUTIVES: MICHAEL BENSON AND MARIA PROVENCIO, CO-EXECUTIVE VPs OF MARKETING, ABC ENTERTAINMENT GROUP

ong: "You Found Me" /// Songwriters: Joseph King, Isaac lade /// Show: "Lost"

ometimes the sound of a band can help define a network. It ll started when the Fray's "You Found Me" was placed on "Grey's natomy." The group's sound resonated with ABC viewers, nd Michael Benson developed a plan to incorporate its music nto a number of shows, as well as the network's online prop-rties. Soon, the Fray was the centerpiece of a campaign pro-noting the return of "Lost," and the band has received significant xposure on ABC's Web sites. "What we have to offer from a usic and television standpoint gives the audience that much ore," he says. And the deal is reverberating throughout the ndustry—Benson says labels are now presenting ABC with rtists months in advance in hopes of incorporating them into s programming.

MUSIC SUPERVISOR: ANDREA VON FOERSTER

Executive: Fox Music president Robert Kraft /// Song: "You Make My Dreams" /// Songwriters: Sara Allen, Daryl Hall, John Oates /// Movie: "(500) Days of Summer"

Movies shouldn't be afraid of song-and-dance numbers. After successfully wooing Zooey Deschanel's character, Joseph Gordon-Levitt's Tom—assisted by animated birds straight out of "Snow White"—bursts into song, and his enthusiasm causes the denizens of downtown Los Angeles to dance alongside him. "The song 'You Make My Dreams' by Hall & Oates was actually written into the '(500) Days of Summer' script and everyone loved it, but the original idea was to have Daryl Hall and John Oates sing it on camera," Von Foerster says. "When Hall & Oates didn't want to do an on-camera, we started looking for groups who had a song that was equally infectious and performed by a group who would do an on-camera performance. Nothing ever fully worked out for our shooting schedule and price range, and we ended up ditching the on-camera idea in favor of keeping our perfect song . . . and that dance sequence has become a favorite moment in the film."

EXECUTIVES: DARREN HIGMAN, EXECUTIVE VP OF MUSIC, WARNER BROS.; DOUG FRANK, PRESIDENT OF MUSIC OPERATIONS, WARNER BROS.

Song: "Desolation Row" /// Songwriter: Bob Dylan /// Film: "Watchmen"

Smart musical decisions can help make fan boys even more obsessed about genre movies. The key audience for comic book films isn't the one that sits in the theater: It's the one that reads about the film ahead of time on the Internet. Bad prerelease word-of-mouth can kill a genre film, and among fan boys, every decision from casting to the colors used in the ad campaign is scrutinized. For the music of "Watchmen," Warner Bros. did it right, enlisting My Chemical Romance for a cover of Bob Dylan's "Desolation Row" in a crucial scene. "My Chemical Romance's Gerard Way is a big graphic novel fan—he has his own series,

'Umbrella Academy,' " Higman says. "And he's a big 'Watchmen' fan. For him and [director] Zack Snyder, it was a mutual love of graphic novels that brought them together." And it's that passion for the source material, Higman says, that resonated with fans on the Internet. (And Dylan's work is mentioned in the graphic novel on which the film is based.) "Watchmen" earned $107 million at the domestic box office, according to Box Office Mojo, and the digital version of "Desolation Row" has sold 77,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

EXECUTIVE: KATHY NELSON, HEAD OF MUSIC, UNIVERSAL ong: "Virtual Diva" /// Songwriters: William Omar Landron Don Omar), Jose Armando /// Film: "Fast & Furious"

Using Latin music in the right vehicle (pun intended) can expose artists to a crossover audience. The soundtrack to "Fast . Furious"—the fourth installment in the series featuring ast cars and Vin Diesel's biceps—was revved up by Latin rtists like Pitbull and Don Omar alongside the production ervices of the Neptunes. (The previous installment in the eries, "Tokyo Drift," featured a N*E*R*D track, "She Wants o Move.") "Pharrell pulled in major favors," Nelson says with laugh. "As with all of the 'Fast' movies, music was one of he elements that I really do think propelled the movie." "Fast : Furious" went on to tally $155 million at the domestic box ffice, according to Box Office Mojo. The "Fast & Furious" oundtrack has sold 45,000 copies, according to Nielsen oundScan, while Omar's "Virtual Diva" from the soundack has tallied 90,000 digital downloads.

MUSIC SUPERVISOR: GARY CALAMAR

Executive: Executive producer Alan Ball /// Song: "Dig" /// Songwriters: Alan Ball, Bruno Coon /// Show: "True Blood"

Melding plot with music is a sure way for songs to resonate with viewers. In the fourth episode of the second season of HBO's vampire tale "True Blood," a hip-hop track is played in the background of a party and then repeated over the end credits. It was listed on HBO's Web site as "Dig" by the band Headbone, but fans of the show started clamoring for the song when they couldn't find the track anywhere online for purchase or streaming. Here's the secret: "I had a Tone-Loc song as a placeholder, and then when we were deciding the final cut, Alan [Ball] said, 'I'll write and record something to play in the background,' " Calamar says. Written with the show's music editor, Bruno Coon, the tune wound up being a "fun, dirty little hip-hop song," Calamar says. When the show was in its final playback for producers before going to air, the track was slipped over the end credits as a joke for Ball. He loved it and kept it in. "The next day the blogs and the Internet went crazy, because it wasn't listed anywhere—Headbone was our music editor's band," Calamar says. "We were bombarded with requests, but we kept hush-hush about it." They're silent no more: The track will be on the show's upcoming second-season soundtrack.

COMPOSER: BEAR MCCREARY

Album: "Battlestar Galactica: Season 4" /// Show: "Battlestar Galactica"

A smartly marketed score can have just as much impact as a well-placed song. For the past 18 months, Bear McCreary has been performing selections from his "Battlestar Galactica" scores at clubs and venues, and show fans have turned out in droves. "A lot of people associate the music with the specific scenes and character and have said, 'If I close my eyes, I can relive the whole season,' " McCreary says. "For others, it's an emotional rather than a narrative connection—these melodies conjure up an emotional connection to 'Battlestar.' " An emotional connection to a sci-fi show? Definitely. "Bear McCreary's music was an integral part of the reinvention of 'Battlestar Galactica.' Its complexity, depth and breadth helped elevate the series beyond a simple 'space opera,' " says Mark Stern, SyFy Channel executive VP of original programming and Universal Cable Productions co-head of original content. McCreary's shows reached their peak this year at Comic-Con in San Diego and became a buzz-generating showcase. "The set was twice as long, and we had almost the entire cast of the show," he says. "The fan response was incredible. It was a delightfully surreal experience." ....

HOW FOX AND COLUMBIA USED 'GLEE' TO REWRITE THE SCRIPT ON TV MUSIC • BY MONICA HERRERA

When Tony Soprano finally—all right, possibly—got whacked to the sounds of Journey's "Don't Stop Believin' " in June 2007, America had mixed reactions. But the show's viewers all agreed that TV's greatest mafia boss and music's shiniest power ballad were linked for life, seared into pop culture consciousness. • If someone had predicted that two years later, a prime-time comedy about a high school choir would revive Journey's biggest hit yet again, they would have been laughed off the lot. • But here we are in 2009, and "Glee"—a new prime-time comedy on Fox about singing and dancing social outcasts—daft jocks, pregnant cheerleaders and divas in training—has done just that. The show's pilot episode, which premiered May 19, not only introduced viewers to Rachel Berry (Lea Michele), Finn Hudson (Cory Monteith), Mercedes Jones (Amber Riley) and the rest of the show's choir gang, but also to their recording of "Don't Stop Believin'," which replaces Steve Perry's epic yelps for Monteith's boyish croon.

Then it got viewers to buy that recording on iTunes: Through the week ending Oct. 18, the "Glee" version of the song has sold 522,000 downloads, according to Nielsen SoundScan. In the week following its TV debut, it sold 177,000 downloads and entered the Billboard Hot 100 at No. 4—higher than Journey's version ever charted.

Several TV shows move music fans to buy songs they hear, but "Glee" gets them to buy new versions by the program's cast. Columbia sells the recordings on iTunes, and the label has had a striking amount of success.

"In all the years that I've been in the business, I've never worked on anything quite like this," says Geoff Bywater, head of the music department at 20th Century Fox Television. "It's a real cultural phenomenon that you can just feel. We've got people who are going to have great acting careers and recording histories for themselves in the future."

Collectively, 20 titles by the "Glee" cast have sold 1.8 million digital tracks, with 1.3 million of those downloads occurring since the week ending Sept. 13, according to SoundScan.

At press time, "Glee" has aired just eight episodes and released 23 songs for purchase, with iTunes getting the music a week in advance of other digital outlets and mobile carriers.

Eleven titles have subsequently entered the Billboard Hot 100—from the cast version of Journey's song to their interpretations of Rihanna's "Take a Bow," Queen's "Somebody to Love" and Avril Lavigne's "Keep Holding On." (The original songs get a sales boost, too. Downloads of the Journey track increased by 48% in the week following the show's premiere, and "Somebody to Love" rose from 2,000 to 6,000 downloads in the week that ended Oct. 4.)

Twentieth Century Fox and Columbia Records, the network's label partner for marketing and distributing the music of "Glee," now project a minimum of 4 million digital downloads by Christmas.

"We knew that once the show started rolling it would be great," says Columbia/Epic Label Group chairman Rob Stringer, who signed Columbia's deal with Fox this spring. "But to be honest, I didn't think it would be this big this quickly. I thought it would tak people a moment to catch up, but the reaction has been instant.

In the next three months, the label will send plenty of proc ucts to retail to take advantage of that momentum. The "Gle The Music Volume 1" soundtrack is set for a Nov. 3 releas with a second volume slated for Dec. 8; an exclusive Christma single is in the works, and a cast tour is planned for summe 2010. There's also the possibility of releasing solo albums b individual cast members in the future.

"I don't know whether our estimate of 4 million download by Christmas increases the possibility of the soundtrack doin well or decreases it," Stringer says. "That's why I'm so keen t get it out. Not only will we learn from how the physical ma ketplace responds, but also from what happens when the albu goes up on iTunes."

It's clear that digital track sales are just the start of what prom ises to be a lucrative strategy for Fox and Columbia—and a ne model for how the music industry can generate cash from TV show

"I'm not sure other labels saw it as dramatically as we did. Pe ple saw the show and loved it, but because the songs were cov versions, I think they honestly didn't think that the potential fo the music was as great as we thought it was," Stringer says.

FINDING A HAPPY PLACE

Like most people, Ryan Murphy loves to sing in the showe and the co-creator/director of "Glee" is open-minded whe it comes to his music playlists. On "Glee," "Cabaret" sho tunes, Celine Dion tearjerkers and Color Me Badd jams a make the cut.

After the success of his cutting-edge FX show "Nip/Tuck Murphy decided he wanted to channel that love of music int his next project. "Everybody thinks I'm the dark prince of te evision," Murphy says by phone from Bali, where he is film ing the movie adaptation of "Eat, Pray, Love." "But I was at point where I wanted to do something light. I've always bee ery into music, and I wanted to show that."

In early 2008, Murphy came across an independent creenplay by Ian Brennan titled "Glee." The movie was ark and not necessarily up his alley, but Murphy found imself hooked on the title, a word that he defines as "ma- cious optimism." Murphy convinced Brennan to redo Glee" as an acerbic TV comedy, and along with co-writer rad Falchuk, they pitched the show to Fox executives in pring 2008.

The network quickly jumped onboard, and soon Fox began creening a four-minute trailer of "Glee" for major-label ex- cutives in the hopes of securing a partner to market and istribute the show's music. "We wanted to get somebody n the record business onboard early," Bywater says. "As it rned out, there was quite a bit of competition for a show hat hadn't even broadcast yet." The contenders were nar- owed down to four labels but Fox ultimately chose Colum- ia, and Murphy says it was because of Stringer's conviction hat "Glee" would succeed.

"Everyone else said, 'Oh, this could do really well,' but Rob aid, 'I don't think you know what you have,' " Murphy says. He always had a plan and a passion."

Columbia has assembled a team for "Glee" to complement ne one at Fox, with counterparts in publicity, A&R, marketing nd sales. The label now releases the songs it feels most strongly bout on iTunes up to two weeks before they air on "Glee." While the bulk of downloads are purchased in the 18-hour pe- od following a new episode, consumers are increasingly buy- ng advance tracks as well.

"What really sells it is that we use these songs in all of our ds," says Fox senior VP of marketing Laurel Bernard. "It's all oming back to us as additional marketing. The show pushes ne music, and the music equally pushes the show."

SHOW TIME

A "Glee" preview aired on Fox May 19 and benefited from a massive lead-in of "American Idol" viewers during finale week. As the show was advertised relentlessly during the summer and the cast went on a tour of Hot Topic stores, the hype grew leading up to the Sept. 9 season premiere.

Since then, "Glee" has averaged 7.2 million viewers across 5.1 million homes, according to Nielsen, with 1.7 million of them female viewers ages 18-34. According to Fox, "Glee" has lowered the network's median age of viewers—an all-important statistic for advertisers—down three years, from 44 to 41.

Meanwhile, loyal fans (who call themselves "Gleeks") have been treated to new versions of Jazmine Sullivan's "Bust Your Windows," Neil Diamond's "Sweet Caroline," Kanye West's "Gold Digger" and even "Defying Gravity" from the Broadway musical "Wicked."

"Ryan Murphy's brain is iTunes," says 23-year-old Lea Michele, a seasoned Broadway soprano who plays the aspiring superstar Berry. "I've never met anyone with a music vocabulary as incredible as his . . . in the 13th episode, I go from singing a Barbra Streisand song into a Rolling Stones song into a Kelly Clarkson song," she says, clearly elated.

"If 'Glee' were just 'High School Musical' on steroids, I don't think it would have been as successful," Bywater says. "What makes the show work so well is the storylines, the comedy and the music choices, which are perfect for the 'Rock Band' generation. There's something for almost everybody in any given week."

Once Murphy chooses a song, music supervisor P.J. Bloom has to clear the rights with its publishers and music producer Adam Anders then rearranges it for the "Glee" cast. Numbers are rehearsed and choreographed if necessary, and then recorded in the studio. The intensive process begins six to eight weeks before an episode tapes and can end the day before.

"In '24' you would have the special effects budget—in 'Glee' you have a music budget," Bywater says. "Music is our special effects."

Seeking a promotional boost of their own, artists are increasingly angling to have their songs featured on the show. "Billy Joel has called and said, 'I love the show. Please use my music,' " Bywater says. In early 2010, an entire episode will be devoted to the music of Madonna.

Though "Glee" has only featured covers until this point, Murphy plans to use some original music in the spring. "I've had a lot of calls from songwriters, to the point where it's kind of embarrassing and ridiculous," he says. "So we're writing an episode called 'Original Song' where the teacher asks the kids to write their own piece of music. Diane Warren is going to do two big ballads, and if it works, we'll see what happens . . . but we won't do it all the time."

HOLIDAY CHEER

Now that the show's download surges have established a weekly rhythm, Stringer and Bywater can focus their attention on the release of "Glee: The Music Volume 1," the first in a series of soundtracks featuring music from the show. The 17-song set will feature some of the most popular numbers from the season's first half. Columbia and Fox hope to attract casual buyers as well as the show's rabid fans.

"We think there will be a huge population of passive buyers walking through stores during the holidays and saying, 'Oh, I've seen "Glee," ' and picking up the record," Bywater says. "I think we'll see considerable sales in the Wal-Marts, Targets and Best Buys of the world."

In addition to the soundtracks, a cover of Wham's "Last Christmas" will be recorded by the cast, and although it won't air on the show, the song will be released as a single by mid-November.

As for long-term plans, a much-rumored cast tour is now in the initial stages of planning. It will likely occur in summer 2010, and Murphy will direct the show. A deal with a concert promoter is pending, he says, noting, "We're going to sit with them all in a couple of weeks and feel out the best vibe."

Another less-talked-about component of Columbia's deal with Fox is that the label has the option to sign members of the "Glee" cast to solo deals. But Stringer says the label isn't rushing to do this anytime soon, as it's committed to the show for more than one season.

" 'Glee' isn't even anywhere near where it will be in a month or year's time," he says. "The show will be five times bigger than it is now, just from word-of-mouth, so we're not in any panic or rush to overplay things, because there's plenty of time."

That said, it appears that one of the show's brightest stars has at least been sitting with label executives to discuss what her own material might sound like. "Lea has tried different songs and already thought, 'Maybe I like doing rock,' " Murphy says. "Her album is not going to be Broadway stuff. She'll sit with producers and come up with her own concept."

As for whether any other cast members have had talks with Columbia, Michele will only say, "I have no idea, but all I know is that as soon as Amber Riley [who plays Mercedes] makes her album, I'm going to be the first one buying it."

However popular "Glee" becomes in the near year, or two, or three—that's as many as Murphy has mapped out so far—it's clear the show has legs in more than one sector of the entertainment business. And through its partnership with Fox, Columbia knows that it's landed on a winning formula.

"I'd like to have 10 'Glees'—my life would be a lot easier," Stringer says. "So, do I want to continue to be in this business? Absolutely." ••••

NOW THAT THE ROOTS ARE ON TV FIVE TIMES A WEEK, WILL THE EXPOSURE TRANSLATE INTO ALBUM SALES?

BY MARIEL CONCEPCION • PHOTOGRAPH BY BEN WATTS

For the past seven months, Questlove has been on the run. The Roots drummer, whose driver's license reads "Ahmir Thompson," wakes up every day between 6 and 7 a.m. to catch an 8 a.m. train from his hometown of Philadelphia and usually doesn't return home until 11 p.m.

That's because at the top of the year, the band accepted a jo as the house band for "Late Night With Jimmy Fallon," whic premiered in March on NBC. "My friend ["Chappelle's Show producer] Neal Brennan asked me who I was thinking of for house band, and I said that I didn't know," Fallon says. " 'Yo should ask the Roots,' he said. 'The Roots? You think they'd d it?' 'No,' he said. 'But maybe they'd know someone.' "

"Back in the day, we were young and fresh out of school, ha no families and no responsibilities—the sky was the limit. Bu fast forward, and you've got wives, kids, ballet recitals, footba practices, first day of middle school, flu shots, and it gets harde every year," Thompson says. "We just wanted to be in one plac and the only job that can give us that comfort without us se ing a dip monetarily was doing a residency. For us to be in on place and make the same amount of money made a lot of sense.

His harrowing commute is paying off, though. While the gi is time-consuming, the show has an average of 1.7 million view ers, according to Nielsen, which means the Roots are likely gai ing a slew of new fans. While sales of previous albums haven increased meaningfully, many close to the band believe tha ales of its forthcoming album will reflect its new platform.

The idea that a new fan base might be the result of the resiliency is a surprise to Thompson; he says his biggest concern when he took the "Fallon" gig was that he would alienate the group's current fans.

"We put on a whole pile of extracurricular work to fend off bloggers and press people that were ready to say we sold out for taking the job," Thompson says, adding that the Roots reinstated their Jam Sessions—weekly concerts that the group staged in 1999 and are now held at New York's Highline Ballroom—in February (the series ends in November) because they wanted to prove to themselves "that we weren't getting lazy. We were so busy thinking about the bullets we were going to be fired that we discounted this could actually benefit us. We didn't think we could get new fans; we just wanted to be in one place. One thing we didn't bank on was the show being a success and our profile raising five times more than before the show." (At $10 per ticket, all Jam Sessions have sold out, and most sell out in advance.)

But the act hasn't broken the 1 million sales mark with any of its albums since its 1993 inception—the group's latest set, 2008's "Rising Down," has sold 171,000 copies in the United States, and its biggest seller is the 1999 "Things Fall Apart," with 921,000, according to Nielsen SoundScan—and it plans to release its next album, "How I Got Over," at the top of next year. Will the exposure translate into album sales?

According to Roots manager Richard Nichols, that remains to be seen. "I don't know if the new fans are the same music fans from before," he says. "People that watch late night are older and more along the lines of middle Americans. So, it's definitely a fan, but you have fans that don't buy your product and don't come to a show."

"Fallon" music booker Jonathan Cohen says the Roots are gaining new fans every day, especially among other artists who perform on the show. "We've had numerous artists who were more nervous about meeting the Roots than about their own performance on the show," he says. "People are in awe of them, for good reason. More people than ever are aware of what an amazing band they are. My hope is that because of the show, a lot of new fans will pick up the album when it comes out."

"It's a great opportunity for them to expand their brand and shows their level of artistry," says Chris Atlas, senior VP of marketing at the Roots' label, Def Jam. "They are taking their art to another platform and that's what hip-hop is about. To me, they should be praised for continuing to expand their boundaries."

Thompson, who calls his nightly appearances a "blessing in disguise, one-hundred fucking percent," hopes new and old fans alike will pick up the band's new project. "We have a slew of new fans," he says, "not to mention the creative juices that are flowing from us interacting and playing with other artists on the show," including Michael McDonald, Tom Jones, Smokey Robinson and Eric Idle, to list a few. In addition to music, the Roots are responsible for creative segments on "Fallon" like "Slow Jam the News," during which Fallon and Roots MC Tariq "Black Thought" Trotter re-enact the day's events as R&B singers, and "Freestylin' With the Roots," for which Fallon randomly picks members of the audience, asks them three questions about themselves and has the Roots rap on the spot incorporating their answers.

Although it doesn't yet have a release date, the album is technically finished, according to Thompson. Because the band spends so much time working on the show, it will be the first album since the group's debut, "Organix," that the members recorded together. For other releases they recorded their parts separately and mix them together later.

"This will mark the first time since then that we've written and created songs in front of each other in the same room," Thompson says. "That's because having this job forces you to create music three to five hours a day.

"This is the most songwriting I've ever done in my life," he adds. "Since March, I think we have about 723 jams in the can. There is a difference between a performance if you play with musicians that are in synch rather than doing it isolated and alone—there's just a different energy when we do it this way."

Thompson, who first calls the album "the light at the end of the tunnel," goes on to name spirituality and the recession as two main lyrical themes, isn't worried whether the band's new gig leads to sales. "We're the last group making art records on a major label for rappers. If there's a world for Bob Dylan and Joni Mitchell—prestige artists under rock monikers—then those same standards should apply to us as well," he says. "Hip-hop acts should be able to put out art records without having to worry about putting their lives on the line or not releasing anything unless they don't sell millions."

At the very least, they're already innovators in their own right for what a modern-day TV band should be, according to Cohen. "I can't really imagine another band being able to pull this off so well. They are tearing up the playbook for what a TV band is supposed to be and coming up with something totally new," he says.

Thompson agrees. "To complain about what we don't have might be a moot point, because who is on their label for 17 years after the fact? Conventional wisdom says selling a million albums is what keeps labels from dropping you. But we are 11 albums in and we haven't gotten dropped," he says. "People that care, they respect the Roots. Others that don't care, they are indifferent. But the cool thing is that, because of the show, they might've just discovered us." ••••

FLOWER CHILD

Big Kenny Goes Green On New Solo Album

John Rich likes to make his politics loud and public, writing songs in praise of John McCain and the fiery populist anthem "Shuttin' Detroit Down." But his Big & Rich cofounder, Big Kenny, prefers to make his statements a little more subtle. While his new album, "The Quiet Times of a Rock and Roll Farm Boy," due Nov. 10 on Glotown/Love Everybody/Bigger Picture, doesn't have any scorching tracks about saving the planet, it contains a message about the importance of conservation right in the package. Each CD is encased in cardboard studded with ready-to-plant wildflower seeds.

As with most of Big Kenny's ideas, he sees this initiative as part of a bigger picture. "We call it Flower Power Packaging because there is nothing in here to waste. You can take this cardboard wrapper, soak it in water and plant it," he says. "It has got 26 different varieties of wildflowers that are my favorites. We asked people to take pictures of their flowers and built a system to track where the pictures come from. Wherever the biggest flower power glow is coming from, we are going to go there and play a show there for that community. We dreamed all that up in the University of Creativity."

The "University of Creativity" is Big Kenny's name for his home, state-of-the-art studio and offices. But this "University" is no ivory tower, and Big Kenny is eager to get the word out about his music. "I feel like I was able to cover myself and what I do musically through the span of those 10 songs," he says. "This is what I am about—my musical influences from '70s rock'n'roll to good old country and to where I found my middle ground in between."

When execs at Warner Bros. didn't like his solo music, he managed to extricate himself from "label slavery" and launched his own Glotown/Love Everybody label, partnering with Bigger Picture Group for sales and marketing. (He's still distributed through Warner.) He assembled a team that includes Creative Artists Agency for booking and publicity with Wortman Works, and oversees a staff of 10.

"The situation that I have built is all about passionate partnerships," he says. "It is like being the captain of a pirate ship, and you take along the crew that you need for that voyage."

Big Kenny and his crew have already filmed videos for every song on the album, including one for the first single, "Long After I'm Gone," which was filmed on the family farm he was raised on in Culpepper, Va. The opening track, "Wake Up," which Big Kenny co-wrote with Jon Nicholson and 3 Doors Down's Brad Arnold, features Native American vocals from the Blackfoot Confederacy and is accompanied by a video that Big Kenny shot in Canada when the Confederacy invited him for a special ceremony to receive his blood name.

"Kenny is one of the most prolific artists that I've had the opportunity to work with," says Bob Cahill, a partner in Bigger Picture Group. "The messages that he conveys are very positive and messages I think that need to be heard in tough times that we're facing now."

Fans can preorder the album on his Web site, BigKenny.tv, and he's creating his own iPhone app as well. Cahill says they're also alerting consumers through an extensive e-mail blast campaign. "We're hitting the various lists that Kenny fans participate in," he says. "We have several thousand names on Big Kenny's list. We have the Muzik Mafia list. Warner Bros. has been very cooperative in letting us use the Big & Rich list, which has grown to a very substantial number."

Big & Rich have been on hiatus while the two of them recorded their solo albums, but the duo reunited last summer for a tour. Cahill says the tour provided an opportunity to give away the single and alert fans to the new music.

"Our view of the album is that it's a complete, sequenced piece of work—not a few singles and some filler," he says. "It flows from start to finish and contains important messages, and is meant to be heard that way. We will mix the best of what works from the traditional marketing drivers with the best of new technologies and mediums to execute a long-term strategy on behalf of the project. It is not about the first week, but where we end up." ••••

>>>BEATLES BOOST MUSIC GAME SALES

MTV's "The Beatles: Rock Band," released Sept. 9, had total sales of 595,000, according to the NPD Group. It was the third-best-selling game of the month behind "Halo 3: ODST" and "Madden NFL 10." Activision's "Guitar Hero 5," released Sept. 1, ranked fourth for the month with 499,000. On the heels of these figures, MTV released the first full-album downloadable content update for "The Beatles: Rock Band" in the form of "Abbey Road."

>>>LAMBERT SINGLE LEAKS

Adam Lambert's new single "Time for Miracles" has leaked online, a week ahead of its planned Oct. 27 debut. The song, which anchors the soundtrack to the upcoming apocalypse-themed movie "2012," was to premiere along with its music video during screenings of Michael Jackson's "This Is It" movie, but it hit the iTunes Italy store during the weekend and then landed on YouTube. "Time for Miracles" was produced by Rob Cavallo, who is also said to have collaborated with Lambert on his debut album, reportedly now due Nov. 23. Lambert has been recording material for his solo debut with a host of hitmakers, including Max Martin, Pink, Linda Perry and Lukasz "Dr. Luke" Gottwald.

>>>U2, YOUTUBE GO LIVE

U2 and YouTube have teamed up to broadcast a live stream of the band's Los Angeles concert this weekend through the video channel. The Oct. 25 show is taking place at the Rose Bowl for those paying to attend, but is free for fans who tune in from the 16 supported countries. This is YouTube's second effort at live-streaming concerts: In August, it aired portions of the Outside Lands music festival; the U2 show will be the first start-to-finish live stream. Like other live concert streams, portions will be archived and available for streaming afterward.

Juvenile Returns After A Three-Year Hiatus

Long before Lil Wayne was topping sales charts, Juvenile was selling albums and laying the foundation for Cash Money Records, the label that eventually launched the tattooed rapper to superstardom.

As part of the Hot Boy$, along with rappers Turk, B.G. and Lil Wayne, Juvenile released three albums and sold 1.8 million copies in the United States, according to Nielsen SoundScan. As a solo artist Juvenile has released seven albums, including 2006's "Reality Check," which debuted at No. 1 on the Billboard 200, and sold 9.4 million copies. He's also had a number of hit singles, like "Slow Motion," which reached No. 1 on the Billboard Hot 100.

Now, after a three-year hiatus, Juvenile is bringing his Southern bounce back to the mainstream with his eighth solo album, "Cocky and Confident," due Nov. 17 on UTP/Atlantic Records/E1. "The album is kind of like a bragging thing: Just me doing my thing," says Juvenile, born Terius Gray. "The entire album is basically all about Juvie. I'm trying to focus on what everybody else isn't doing right now. I just wanted to bring my part of hip-hop back."

To do so, Juvenile worked with a number of producers from his native New Orleans, including S-8ighty, Lu Balz, C Smith and Mouse. Pleasure P, Bobby Valentino, Rico Love, B.G., Kango Slim, Dorrough, Shawty Lo and Q Corvette make guest appearances.

To reintroduce his sound, two singles were released simultaneously: the braggadocio-filled "Gotta Get It," which is No. 67 on Billboard's Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs chart, and the up-tempo, flirty "Hands On You."

Other tracks on the album include the bass-heavy club song "We Be Getting Money"; "Listen," which was produced by Juvenile and is dedicated to his son; and the upbeat "I'm Feeling Right Right Now."

Although there isn't yet a set date, Juvenile says a Hot Boy$ reunion album is still under discussion, adding that he and former Cash Money head Bryan "Baby" Williams recently had a sit-down about it and "settled our differences." (Juvenile left the label due to what he says were "money and contractual issues.")

To promote "Cocky and Confident," E1 senior VP of marketing John Franck says video blogs will be released to key urban sites leading up to the release of the album, in which Juvenile "tells his story, going back to Hot Boy$ and all the way to what he's been up to in the last few years."

Three singles from the album will be sold digitally before their retail releases, and ringtones for all album tracks will be available on all major mobile carriers 10 days prior to the album's release date.

A promo tour, which will begin two or three weeks before the release, is also in the works; Franck also hints at a national tour. "We Be Getting Money," featuring Dorrough and Shawty Lo, will be released as the third single in the coming weeks, and an accompanying video is slated to be serviced concurrently.

Juvenile reveals that he'll release a follow-up album in the next year and continue to sign artists to UTP and run his club and studio in his hometown.

"Right now, I'm trying to make me the biggest thing," he says. "All guns are on me. I'll be coming back with an album real soon. It won't be another two or three years before you hear from me again." ••••

SOMETHING TO TALK ABOUT

Say Anything Tries To Break Through The Static

In a way, the story of Say Anything is really a meta-story about the music business. The band, led by founder Max Bemis, has a few things that set it apart, most notably Bemis' public struggles with bipolar disorder and drug addiction.

But those issues aside, Sa Anything is almost an any band. It has a decent size an committed—though nc massive—fan base. Its 200 album, "Is a Real Boy," sol 230,000 copies; the follow up, the 2007 "In Defense o the Genre," sold 119,000, a cording to Nielsen Sound Scan. It played the Van Warped tour and toured wit contemporaries like Dasl

Big news: GRAFFITI 6

>>>SUN SCREEN

Synch deals aren't new as a fast-track to publicity, but it's a big break when one involves an unsigned band and Britain's best-selling daily newspaper.

The Sun newspaper, which has an average daily circulation of 3.1 million copies (according to the Audit Bureau of Circulations), licensed the unreleased track "Stare Into the Sun" for its summer TV ad campaign from the newly formed pop act Graffiti 6.

The deal happened when Sony/ATV, which publishes the act's Tommy D, sent the son to the newspaper through th music supervision compan Huge Music. The publicatio then covered Graffiti 6 sever times. "The minute they foun out we weren't signed, it wa an opportunity for them to g behind something," lead vo calist Jamie Scott says.

Scott adds that the expo sure has brought major labe to the group's door and the a is now focused on finishing i album for release in 201 when "Stare Into the Sun" likely to be issued as a single ies are wondering the same hing: How do we break out

f the pack?

Plenty of bands spend their e big but not huge. But emis makes no bones about anting to cross over to the ainstream. "His goal is to e big on a Blink-182, Foo ighters level," manager Joran Kurland says.

In addition to releasing
tandard versions of the lbum, RCA is putting out an $89 deluxe edition, which features vinyl, download cards, demos, posters, a shirt and lyric sheets. While the price point might seem high for a band with a young fan base, RCA senior VP of marketing Aaron Borns contends that fans will see value in getting so much product all at once.

Say Anything also recorded a series of acoustic concerts for various online outlets, and Bemis dutifully tweets and blogs up a storm. A single, the cheerfully titled pop-punk anthem "Hate Everyone," was promoted to modern rock radio Sept. 15, and Kurland says progress has been slow and steady.

"Every week we get messages that one or two more stations have added the song," he says. "We know that this is a crowded time, and we're hoping to make a bigger impact in the new year."

Kurland, who has been working with Say Anything for six months, speculates that the band's lack of a hit single has kept it from breaking through. Its highest-selling digital single, a track called "Wow, I Can Get Sexual Too," was released in 2006 and has sold 237,000 downloads.

In the meantime, Borns says RCA is focusing on licensing tracks from the self-titled album, a fairly new strategy for Say Anything. "In the past, his songs were so specific and pointed that they didn't really work for commercial use," he says. "But the lyrics on this record are more open to interpretation, and we've had a better response."

Bemis says that the more general lyrics represent his recovery from his past mental illness and drug problems. "The songs are still very personal, but I can see more broad themes and social issues, too," he says.

And if the album doesn't take off, Bemis has a fallback plan in place.

"For the past few years, I did this thing called Song Shop, where I did custom songs for $150 each," he says. "I've seen the effects of the industry falling apart, and these songs are something you can't pirate. I've written songs about a third-grade class; I've written songs about dogs. I figure I can always go back to doing it." ••••

>>>FUNKY MEDINA

Denmark's biggest hit of the past 12 months looks set to become an international smash.

Medina's "Kun For Mig" was released in Denmark on SC Entertainment's Labelmade imprint in September 2008, spending six weeks at No. 1 on the IFPI/Nielsen chart. Domestic sales stand at 75,000 copies and a video for the dance track has been viewed 2 million times on YouTube, SC managing director Thomas Børresen says.

An English-language version, "You & I," got a U.K. release Oct. 12 through a licensing deal with Parlophone/EMI and has already been added to playlists by BBC top 40 Network Radio 1. EMI plans to release the track globally, Børresen adds. "It's been a fantastic project," he says. "EMI has been very swift in setting everything in motion."

SC released Medina's album "Velkommen Til Medina" Aug. 31 in Denmark, and Børresen says it's sold 15,000 copies.

SC partners Rasmus Stabell and Jeppe Federspiel (also known as the production team Providers) produced the song and co-wrote it with Medina; the English version was adapted by Adam Polwers and Julie Steincke. The original is published by Youmade Publishing and Warner/Chappell; Sunshine Music Publishing and Sony/ATV Scandinavia share in the English-language version.

Børresen says an English-language album will be released in first-quarter 2010. SC also handles Medina's booking. —Charles Ferro

6 QUESTIONS

with CARLY SIMON

by GAIL MITCHELL

Carly Simon recorded her new album, "Never Been Gone" (Iris Records/RED, Oct. 27), at her Martha's Vineyard compound, and she delivers intriguing twists on songs from her storied career ("You're So Vain," "Anticipation"), as well as two new tunes. A portion of the album's proceeds will go to the Carly Simon Music Therapy Initiative, a collaboration between Simon and the Berklee College of Music.

"Never" also helped Simon work through despair and anger over her 2008 Hear Music release, "This Kind of Love." She's seeking unspecified damages in a lawsuit she recently filed against Starbucks, saying the company's now-defunct music venture didn't fully promote the album (Billboard.com, Oct. 13).

Along for Simon's restorative trip down memory lane was a host of family and friends, including son Benjamin Taylor and his Iris Records partner Larry Ciancia, daughter Sally Taylor, godson John Forté (the former Fugees producer pardoned for a drug trafficking conviction in 2008), singer/songwriter David Saw and engineer Frank Filipetti. "It was like people were rallying around me," Simon says. "They knew my disappointment."

Moving beyond disappointment, the singer is gearing up for a series of promotional appearances and—unbelievably—her first overseas tour early next year, with DJ Logic in tow.

1 Why did you decide to record this album?

After what happened with "This Kind of Love," I was devastated. It felt like carrying a child to term and then having it die in childbirth. But Ben and Larry said, "Let's not sit around and waste time. You've got these incredible songs you've written. Let's rethink some of them and have fun." And "fun" was the operative word. We all got together in the same room and started rethinking my songs. When I say rethinking, I don't mean in an intellectual way. I mean, we all had a couple of glasses of wine or beer and just started having a good time.

2 Were the two new songs written specifically for the album?

"No Freedom" is a lyric I wrote a few years ago. Ben and singer/songwriter David Saw wrote a melody to it. It had originally been a folk song, but I woke up one morning and said, "It's got to be in 2/4 time like [Elton John's] 'Bennie and the Jets.' " Ben did an absolutely amazing job on the production; it's a great song to dance to.

The album ends with "Songbird," which I wrote in 1970 but never finished. I have hundreds of songs on cassettes around the house. I was listening to one when I heard this song and said, "Wow." The first verse actually came from a different song; I had obviously written the songs around the same time. I also remembered there was a songbird that used to come to my landing when I lived in a little New York apartment on 35th Street, and I'd try to get melodies from its singing. You couldn't do better than a bird.

3 What was it like to work again with your godson, John Forté?

I'm so happy John is free and able to do his music. He's a great poet who raps and sings beautifully. He doesn't sound like anyone else, which is key. He's his own man. I asked John to work with me on "You Belong to Me" and he's going to perform it with me on TV. It's a hip-hop version with a little George Benson feel in the guitar solo.

4 Did you find that your songs stand the test of time?

There were some songs that didn't and others for which we couldn't figure out a new feeling or arrangement—for instance, "Jesse" and "Haven't Got Time for the Pain." And the songs we did do weren't necessarily hits, like "It Happens Every Day" and "Never Been Gone." I've always loved "Never" and the decision to make it a barroom version is one that happened so naturally.

5 Looking back at your career, is there anything you'd change?

Maybe I would have been a bit more careful about who and what I was getting involved with because my enthusiasms can sometimes be my downfall. Some things are both your greatest assets and your biggest detriments. I think my great enthusiasm for doing things has caused me to perhaps not dot the I's and cross the T's as well as I should have.

6 Will you reissue "This Kind of Love"?

Anything is possible at this stage of the game. I'm not closing the door to anything. It was the first time in 10 years that I'd done an album of original songs. It took almost two years to prepare. That's why it hurt so much. My previous album of original material, "Bedroom Tapes," got lost in the mixup when Clive Davis left Arista. So I bought that album back. I've got no idea when, where or how, but the songs I wrote for those two albums are going to get a second life—whether another artist records them or the albums are rereleased. ••••

AIR

Love 2

Producers: Jean-Benoit Dunckel, Nicolas Godin
Astralwerks

Release Date: Oct. 6

Few bands live up to their names as well as Air. The French electronic duo makes gravity-defying disco-pop that can be as foreboding as it is frothy (see the 2000 soundtrack to "The Virgin Suicides"). Air's fifth studio album, "Love 2," hinges on Joey Waronker, a percussionist who toured with the band on its last outing. His delicate playing helps bring all of those potentially spacey piano arpeggios back down to earth, resulting in a sound that resembles the lo-fi pop for which Air first became known more than the cosmic symphony of recent efforts. Ditties like "Sing Sang Sung" include a vibraphone, wind chimes and tambourine, while "African Velvet" has horns and light-handed syncopation from Waronker. It's not immediately clear if the group is always being tongue-in-cheek ("Tropical Disease" is so lounge-y and psychedelic that it could be retrofitted into a Roger Moore-era James Bond flick), but one thing is certain: Style trumps substance in this particular breath of Air.—KM

FIVE FOR FIGHTING

Slice

Producer: John Ondrasik
Aware/Columbia

Release Date: Oct. 13

Five for Fighting mastermind John Ondrasik's '70s musical influences are palpable on the act's fifth release, "Slice." The piano lines on "Hope" recall "Desperado," while "This Dance" sounds like Don McLean creating a mash-up of "Lean on Me" and "Killing Me Softly." But "Slice" isn't completely retro. "Transfer" is a wonderfully complex track with Ben Folds-like harmonies, while the first single, "Chances," soars like early material by Gavin DeGraw. And Ondrasik's themes are particularly strong. The wistful title track addresses how the Internet has fragmented popular culture, while the uplifting ballad "Augie Nieto" centers on the fitness icon's public battle with amyotrophic lateral sclerosis. Although Ondrasik references memories more than he shares them, fans of Five for Fighting will be satisfied by this set.—BS

DEVENDRA BANHART

What Will We Be

Producers: Devendra Banhart, Paul Butler
Warner Bros. Records

Release Date: Oct. 27

Devendra Banhart's major-label debut, "What Will We Be," was recorded with the same collaborators who graced his 2007 "Smokey Rolls Down Thunder Canyon." This time the quintet holed up for two months in a Northern California cabin, and the resulting collection from the idiosyncratic singer/songwriter is intimate, experimental, and ultimately accessible. The first single, "Baby," is a breezy yet bass-heavy love song about "learning to let in all the laughter," while "Chin Chin & Muck Muck" is something of a vanguard mini-review, changing acts between swinging jazz, cabaret torch and a twinkling chant. Banhart's Venezuelan childhood peeks through with Spanish lyrics on "Angelika" and "Brindo," and "Rats" is a full-fledged psychedelic-rock jam. Throughout the set, Banhart's expressive vocals are the real pleasure point; the artist may be known for his self-supported aura of knowing peculiarity, but his voice carries a frankness that—save some well-applied reverb—is gratifyingly free of modern affectation.—EN

JOE NICHOLS

Old Things New

Producers: Brent Rowan, Mark Wright
Universal South

Release Date: Oct. 27

It's no stretch to say that Joe Nichols is country music's finest vocalist in at least a generation. That's not to diminish the often stunning vocal work of his immediate predecessors—what elevates Nichols above his peers in terms of vocal chops is that he's a natural singer. This was evident on his 1996 debut and it's fully realized on his sixth album, "Old Things New." The set's title track evokes the primal pain and loneliness of George Jones during his Billy Sherrill-produced '70s heyday, while Merle Haggard's influence is displayed on the bone-chilling "This Bed's Too Big." Playful moments emerge on "Gimmie That Girl" and "Cheaper Than a Shrink," the latter extolling the painkilling virtues of good whiskey (though Nichols has successfully battled his own demons recently). The haunting "An Old Friend of Mine" finds the 32-year-old Nichols reciting words of sober resolution while communicating tortured forbearance. It looks like his honky-tonk forefathers—Haggard, Jones, Lefty Frizzell and Gene Watson, to name a few—were effective tutors.—WJ

MESHELL NDEGEOCELLO

Devil's Halo

Producers: Meshell Ndegeocello, Chris Bruce
Mercer Street/Downtown

Release Date: Oct. 6

Though not as sprawlingly ambitious or experimental as the 2007 "The World Has Made Me the Man of My Dreams," Meshell Ndegeocello's eighth release, "Devil's Halo," neatly straddles a line between challenging and accessible, with some of the tightest and catchiest compositions she's yet brought forth. Listeners might not get that from the opening song, "Slaughter," which moves from liquid-like verses to crash-bang choruses with a Radiohead-style prog vibe, but tracks like "Mass Transit" and "Blood on the Curb" channel melodic, if slightly subversive, new wave influences—and the Pretenders' Chrissie Hynde would pay large for the leathery attitude of "Lola." Ndegeocello lays jazz overtones atop of "White Girl," old-school synthesizers through "Die Young" and brings out front-porch Americana for "Crying in Your Beer." She also uses a big beat and subtle dissonance to turn Melvin Riley's "Love You Down" into a Joni Mitchell-flavored tone poem. "I transform myself for maximum attraction," Ndegeocello sings in "Mass Transit." It works.—GG

THE GOSSIP

Music for Men

Producer: Rick Rubin
Columbia Records

Release Date: Oct. 6

The androgynous face of Gossip drummer Hannah Blilie cops an intense stare on the cover of this electro-punk outfit's newest album, "Music for Men." With a quaffed confidence a la Morrissey, the photo personifies the cool poise that the Gossip has always maintained with its elegant glam-synth sounds and powerful beats, despite a raucous reputation. It may have been harder for the mainstream audience to swallow the image of Gossip frontwoman Beth Ditto, whose onstage nudity and outsized persona have earned her respect among the gay and lesbian community. But on "Music for Men," the band's devotion to being itself has finally found it a place in the mainstream. The dark single "Heavy Cross" features ragged guitars accompanied by Ditto's sharp velvety voice, while the feminist-leaning "Love Long Distance" is supported by a swaggering bassline. On "Dimestore Diamond," Ditto employs all of her hard-edged sexiness and manages to charm with an appealingly intimidatin allure.—LJW

Declaration of Dependence

Producers: various
Virgin Records

Release Date: Oct. 20

On their first album in five years, the Norwegian duo Eirik Bøe and Erlend Øye—who record under the name Kings of Convenience—have returned with more atmospheric folk-pop to soothe the soul. Percussion is nowhere to be found on the group's latest release, "Declaration of Dependence," and the pair's Simon & Garfunkel-esque harmonies are less dynamic than they once were. But there are still plenty of bright spots. Kings of Convenience's melodies range from the brisk and obtuse—as heard on the angular "My Ship Isn't Pretty" and the brooding "Renegade"—to the disarmingly catchy. On the standout track "Mrs. Cold," Bøe and Øye lace their beloved bossa nova rhythms with R&B lyrics that are aimed at an ice queen, singing, "Acting so tough/Didn't know you had it in you to be hurt at all . . . you lost control and you lost your tongue."—MH

Jealous Ones Still Envy (J.O.S.E. 2)
Producers: various
Terror Squad/EMI
Release Date: Oct. 6

Fat Joe's lyrical flow has never been groundbreaking, but on his ninth studio album, "Jealous Ones Still Envy (J.O.S.E. 2)," the Bronx-bred rapper again proves that he's got a knack for infectious beats. Take for example the flirty "Winding on Me" (featuring Lil Wayne and producer Ron Browz), with its slow-paced, slinky production infused with erratic drums. On the boastful "Aloha" (starring Pleasure P and Rico Love), Fat Joe brags over muffled snares and synthesizers about being "super duper fly" and how he "parties up at Diddy's house." Meanwhile, with its static piano and drum pattern, "Congratulations" can compete with any R. Kelly step track; "Ice Cream" (alongside celebrated rapper Raekwon) gives a nod to the mesmeric Johnson, Moll & King song of the same title; and the electric guitar-heavy "Joey Don't Do It" adds an element of rock'n'roll to the set.—MC

With its new single "Kings and Queens," 30 Seconds to Mars veers from the post-hardcore direction of its previous two albums toward a more accessible sound. Fans might be surprised to hear riffs that recall U2 more than Incubus, but the song was clearly crafted with radio in mind. Stately drums and dramatic strings are paired with lyrics that take on a stark, apocalyptic tone: "The age of man is over, a darkness comes and all/These lessons that we learned here have only just begun." A chorus chants behind singer Jared Leto's smooth, powerful voice, evoking the collective thrill of a live show. Grounded by Leto's convincing vocals, "Kings and Queens" is epic rock at its most affecting.—KS

Two pairs of veteran country siblings come together with impressive results on this tune. "Guilty of the Crime" was featured on the Eagles' 2007 album "Long Road out of Eden" and is revived for an intriguing collaboration between Howard and David Bellamy and Kevin and Michael Bacon. The song is now featured on the Bellamy Brothers' "Anthology, Volume I" and its new production is skillfully understated, focusing on what feels like an effortless blend of the duos' voices. Their solid vocal delivery is what gives "Guilty of the Crime" its main appeal. Though country is its most obvious radio home, the song has a chemistry that could appeal to multiple formats.—DEP

Up-and-comer Angel Taylor's new single sounds like Colbie Caillat for a reason. The song was produced by Mikal Blue and co-written by Blue and Jason Reeves, who first patented breezy, sentimental pop with their work on Caillat's breakthrough single, "Bubbly." What Taylor offers, though, is a slightly sassier tone, as the 20-year-old singer/songwriter takes zestful jabs at the object of her blossoming affection. "Boy you know it's bad when you do that, but you don't care," Taylor sings. "Holding out exactly what I want, but you won't share/And I've never had a taste before/But now you've got me wanting more." Set to a fairly generic, foot-tapping beat, the lyrics are striking in their assertion of conflicted desire—they may not be edgy, but at least they feel honest.—SM

Timbaland is nearing the release of the second installment in his "Shock Value" series, and from the sounds of the first single, "Morning After Dark," the producer is back in stride. Much like the material on his first set, the song heaves with massive sub-bass and weighty kick drums. "You talk about taking it slow/I'm talking about taking it wild/Don't wanna be too upfront, no/Baby you know it's my style," Timbaland flirtatiously harmonizes over a galactic-sounding, double-speed piano and thumping beats. "When the cats come out, the bats come out to play," he croons on the catchy hook, which features his new label signee, SoShy. While comparisons to the 2007 cut "Return the Favor" are undeniable—lacking shock value on that end—this club banger will send shockwaves through your speakers nonetheless.—MC

EMI/Blue Note

Due Nov. 17, Norah Jones' fourth studio album, "The Fall," will incorporate more rhythm and guitar, but it won't be a 180-degree transformation. In fact, both of these elements are introduced with subtlety and care on the album's first single. "Chasing Pirates" floats along with Jones' breathy, sensual vocals over a stream of guitar effects and a new wave-esque groove, courtesy of producer Jacquire King (Kings of Leon, Tom Waits). The lyrics are somewhat obscure but still manage to achieve a winning simplicity, as Jones sings of her preoccupied dream state: "Well the man in there swings, while the silliest thing's floppin' around in my brain/And I try not to dream but them possible schemes swim around, wanna drown me in synch." While her jazzy, piano-driven hits have always been rich in songwriting and arrangement, Jones' experimentation with tempo and instrumentation on her new material is a welcome one.—MM

R&B BY MARIEL CONCEPCION

From 'Break Up' To Breaking Records

Mario Earns His Second-Biggest Chart Hit Since 'Let Me Love You'

The last time Mario saw the pinnacle of Billboard's Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs chart was in 2005. That's when "Let Me Love You"—from his 2004 second album, "Turning Point"—reached No. 1. Four years and two albums later, the Baltimore crooner finds himself close to reclaiming that zenith.

This week, "Break Up" logs its 11th week at No. 2 on the tally. Featuring Sean Garrett and Gucci Mane, it's the lead single from Mario's fourth album, "D.N.A." Debuting this week at No. 9 on the Billboard 200 and No. 2 on Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums, the J Records/RCA Music Group set was released Oct. 13. "Break Up" also gives Mario his fourth top five R&B hit, joining predecessors "Just a Friend," which reached No. 4 in 2002, and the Ne-Yo-penned "Let Me Love You" and "Crying Out for Me," which peaked at No. 5 in 2008.

" 'Break Up' was originally created for someone else, but I beat it out of Sean [who co-wrote and co-produced the track] until he eventually gave it to me," Mario jokes. "A lot of this album is about letting females know that I know what it is they go through sometimes in relationships. So this song was like a conversation that I had to have with my fans."

Picking up where the singer's 2007 album "Go" left off, "D.N.A." finds an introspective and maturing Mario shedding even more light on heart-related matters. "This is a very important album for me—a lot of it was about finding myself and figuring out the makeup of who I am now as opposed to who I was when I started," he says. "Throughout the recording process, I learned so much about myself. Thus the songs became more in-depth—digging out much more of myself. The fans know who I've been up to this point, but now I want them to know who the changed Mario is."

In addition to "Break Up," the album's track list includes the wistful "Don't Walk Away," written with songwriter/producer C. "Tricky" Stewart; the melancholic "Depression"; and "Something I Did Wrong," which Mario describes as reminiscent of Michael Jackson's "Human Nature" and "Ooh Baby" and is "the sexiest song on the album."

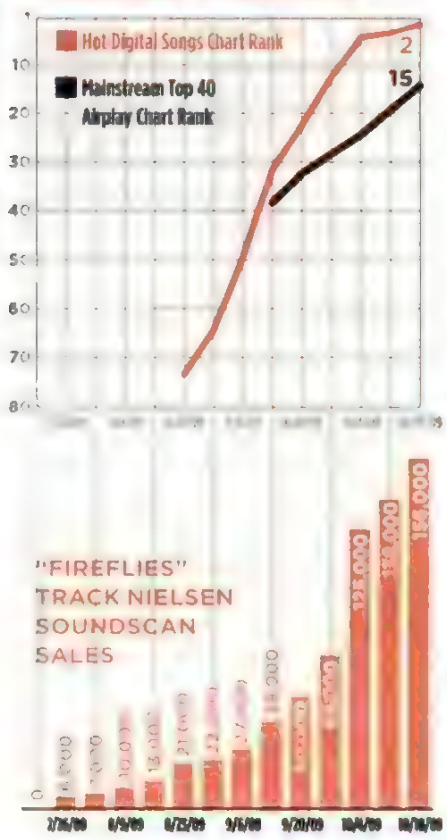
A changed man: MARIO

Currently making its ascent on Hot R&B Hip-Hop Songs is the second single, "Thinkir About You." Produced by the Runners an Rico Love, the song is No. 53 this week. I addition, Mario guests on another sultr track that's climbing up the chart: Hurr cane Chris' "Headboard." The song, whic also features Plies, is No. 71 on the list.

Now hitting the road in support of "D.N.A., Mario is co-headlining a "106 & Park" tour wit Trey Songz. With a lineup that includes Garre and Day 26, the tour is the first of a recently ar nounced partnership between Live Nation an BET. It kicked off Sept. 29 at the House of Blue in Los Angeles and wraps Nov. 25 in Las Vega: Mario will also perform at the Powerhouse '0 concert presented by New York radio statio WWPR (Power 105.1). The Oct. 27 lineup ir cludes Chris Brown, the-Dream and Keri Hi son. A live mixtape by Mario—recorded with live band—is also in the works.

Selling 32,000 copies its first week, accordin to Nielsen SoundScan, "D.N.A." didn't receiv the same warm welcome that greeted "Brea Up." However, Mario remains confident of th album's long-term success.

"I can't say why I don't get my just due, bu it only makes me hungrier," he says. "I want t continue challenging myself and making ir credible music that will connect with fan around the world. I plan to keep creating a di tinctive lane for myself. 'D.N.A.,' with the hel of 'Break Up,' does just that." •••



Owl City's "Fireflies" continues to light up Billboard's sales and airplay charts. The electronic pop/rock song from the act, which consists solely of singer/songwriter Adam Young, takes the runner-up spot this week on the Hot Digital Songs chart with sales of 156,000 copies (up 13%). The title has sold 681,000 digital downloads, according to Nielsen SoundScan. ¶ The song's 9-7 rise on the Billboard Hot 100 is also fueled by its continued radio airplay. On Adult Top 40, "Fireflies" bounds 37-26 with Greatest Gainer honors (up 288 plays, a 100% improvement over last week). On Mainstream Top 40, the track rises 20-15. The song soars 61-42 on Hot 100 Airplay with an all-format audience of 27 million (up 35%). ¶ On the Billboard 200, Owl City's debut Universal Republic album, "Ocean Eyes," jumps 32-20 (21,000 copies, up 14%), surpassing the previous peak (No. 27) it achieved in its debut week in August. The set has sold 155,000 copies to date, according to SoundScan. —Gary Trust

FLIGHT PLAN

Consumers continue to wise up to Owl City. The single "Fireflies" posts its 12th straight gain, while the "Ocean Eyes" album enjoys its ninth weekly sales gain and best week yet.

Sophisticated pop: LEIGHTON MEESTER

POP BY MONICA HERRERA

Balancing Act

Leighton Meester Shifts From 'Gossip Girl' To Pop Woman

"Gossip Girl" actress Leighton Meester hasn't yet released her Universal Republic debut. But it appears the TV star is well on her way to silencing naysayers about her fledgling singing career.

Meester released her first single—a retro dance-pop track titled "Somebody to Love"—to digital retailers Oct. 14 after premiering it on Ryan Seacrest's KIIS-FM Los Angeles morning show. Featuring R&B singer Robin Thicke, the song is already off to a solid start with 102 spins at top 40 radio and 7,000 digital tracks sold through the week ending Oct. 18, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

"I have a crazy, strange life and I work a lot, so the song is about me not getting any," Meester says. "I like that it's electronic but still lyrically driven. It's a very sexy track, and Robin really brought something different to it."

"Somebody to Love" follows "Good Girls Go Bad," Meester's collaboration with Cobra Starship that reached No. 7 on the Billboard Hot 100 during the summer. Universal Republic believes these two songs should assuage anyone who raised an eyebrow when the label announced her signing in April.

"There was some skepticism, but now there's not," says Universal Republic executive VP of A&R Tom Mackay. "As the Cobra record went up the chart, we got better and better material from songwriters. That song immediately validated the project."

Mackay also notes that the vision for Meester's album was clear from the start. "She wanted to make a sophisticated pop record that could work in the clubs and in the international market. And this first single is nothing else if not sophisticated pop."

Although it isn't yet finished, Meester's debut album is tentatively slated for late 2009 or early 2010. She's spent most of the year juggling studio sessions with taping two feature films and the CW network's "Gossip Girl." About 25 songs have been completed, however, and collaborators include producer Mike Caren on "Somebody to Love," Stuart Price on "I Feel Everything" and J.R. Rotem on "Lights Out." Meester also plans to showcase her vocals on more downtempo tracks like "Your Lies Are the Truth."

Universal Republic and CW are also discussing how to promote Meester's album on "Gossip Girl," with short-term ideas ranging from a synch placement of "Somebody to Love" to an exclusive premiere of its music video. "We would be foolish not to utilize the show," Mackay says.

Meanwhile, Meester remains focused on channeling her singing idols—from Madonna and Debbie Harry to Santigold and Lykke Li—and taking the time to get her solo material just right. "I never wanted to pay attention to the business side of acting, and it's the same with music," she says. "I love being creative. As I come up with more stuff, I keep topping myself . . . and this is the perfect time for me to do it." ••••

Soap music: PEDRO FERNANDEZ

A HIGHER CALLING

Pedro Fernandez will always be remembered as the cuter-than-cute child singer/actor who sang "La de la Mochila Azul" and captivated an entire continent as he pined for the "girl with the blue backpack."

No longer little Pedrito, Fernandez is all grown up now: a seasoned mariachi singer who has established himself as one of Mexico's foremost vocalists in the genre. But Fernandez's new album, "Amarte a la Antigua," may catapult him to higher heights thanks to its tie-in with the Mexican soap opera in which the singer also stars, "Hasta que el Dinero nos Separe." Released Sept. 8 in Mexico, the album has spent six weeks on that country's Amprofon sales chart. It currently holds the No. 9 position aided by the first single, which is also the soap opera's theme song.

The rollout is being handled differently in the United States, however. "Amarte" was released Oct. 20 by Fonovisa, although the soap opera won't begin airing stateside until early next year. The soap opera's success in Mexico prompted the label to rush the album's release while also tailoring it for the U.S. market. Because mariachi doesn't receive significant airplay in the States, three banda tracks were added to the album, including the single "Ni Con Otro Corazón." It enters the regional Mexican airplay chart this week at No. 32.

Once "Hasta que el Dinero nos Separe" begins airing stateside in February, the label will launch the album's title track, also featured in the soap. Because Fernandez is still filming the soap in Mexico, the album's domestic release is being promoted by a four-week TV campaign in which Fernandez invites fans to download his music on their cell phones.

Fonovisa president Gustavo Lopez promises the real action will begin once the soap opera begins airing stateside. "This will be the big surprise album of 2010," Lopez says, citing the success of the soap coupled with Fernandez's increasing traction on radio in the States and in Mexico. "All these things are blowing up together." —Leila Cobo

ALEXANDRA THE GREAT

s the winner of the 2008 edition of "The X Fac-or," Alexandra Burke was no stranger to pulling ut big performances on the popular ITV1 show. ut her Oct. 11 return to the program as reigning hamp may prove to be her biggest yet.

It was the same episode in which Robbie Villiams world-premiered his comeback single, Bodies." But it was Burke's spectacular routine for er energetic second single, "Bad Boys" (Syco)—eaturing guest rapper Flo Rida and dozens of ale dancers—that caught everyone's attention.

"It was a world-class, incredible performance," ys Burke's co-manager Richard Griffiths, direc-r of Modest Management. "The response we've d from around the world has been 'Oh, my God, is girl is the real thing.' "

"Bad Boys" crashed onto the U.K. singles chart No. 1 the following week, selling 187,000 first-eek copies—more than double Williams' sales, ccording to the Official Charts Co. It became the stest-selling single since Burke's cover of eonard Cohen's "Hallelujah" sold 311,000 copies a week last December. "Hallelujah" has now ld 1.2 million copies, according to the OCC.

"It was strange and very scary," Burke says of er return to the show that catapulted her from North London council estate to stardom. "I anted to do something out of my comfort zone nd make a big impact."

Burke's debut album, "Overcome" (Oct. 19), was also heading for the No. 1 slot at press time. Described by Griffiths as "a big, uptempo, modern girls' record," the album was developed by Simon Cowell's Syco and Epic Records U.S., with Roc Nation partner Jay Brown assisting with A&R. Ne-Yo guests on the slick R&B track "Good Night, Good Morning"; featured writer/producers include RedOne and Stargate.

Dave Shack, the London-based VP of international for Sony Music U.K., says Sony is following the international rollout template that proved so successful for fellow "X Factor" alumna Leona Lewis' 2007 debut, "Spirit" (Syco). "Overcome" is due in January in Europe and in spring 2010 in the United States.

Burke will appear Dec. 7 at the Royal Variety Performance in Blackpool, which ITV1 will televise at a later date. She will stay busy doing U.K. promotion until early December when her U.S. promo work begins.

"I have to crawl before I can walk and walk before I run," Burke says. "It's going to involve a lot of hard work. But I would love to have Leona's [U.S.] success."

Bublé's Big; 'New Moon' Rises; Christmas Is Here

After Michael Bublé nabbed his second No. 1 album on the Billboard 200 last week with "Crazy Love," with just three days' worth of sales, the set's first full week in stores keeps the title in the penthouse with 203,000 copies sold (up 55%). This marks the singer's second-best sales week. His best came when "Call Me Irresponsible" started with 213,000 in 2007.

Part of Bublé's big gain this week could have come from his Oct. 13 performance on NBC's "Today."

It's the first time the Warner Bros. label has achieved back-to-back weeks at No. 1 since Metallica's "Death Magnetic" spent three straight weeks atop the list in September and October 2008.

Because "Crazy" notches a second week atop the tally, it blocks the "Twilight Saga: New Moon" soundtrack from the top slot; that set bows at No. 2 with 115,000 copies. The Summit/Chop Shop/Atlantic album was pushed up from its original Tuesday, Oct. 20, release date to Friday, Oct. 16, to combat leaks.

With Bublé and "New Moon" at Nos. 1 and 2, WEA Distribution has the top two albums on the tally for the first time since Oct. 25, 2008. That was when T.I.'s "Paper Trail" (Grand Hustle/Atlantic) was in its second week at No. 1 and "Death Magnetic" was No. 2 in its fifth chart week.

BOO! Nevermind that this issue is dated Oct. 31—Christmas is the big holiday on the charts.

Five new holiday sets enter the Billboard 200, led by Bob Dylan's "Christmas in the Heart" at No. 23 with 20,000 copies sold. On Top Holiday Albums (see page 40), Dylan earns his first No. 1 on the tally as "Heart" vaults 21-1 after street-date violations placed it on the list a week early.

Close behind Dylan on the Holiday list is David Archuleta's "Christmas From the Heart" at No. 2 with 17,000 copies.

A year ago this week, the top-selling holiday effort was the "Nightmare Revisited" soundtrack sequel to "The Nightmare Before Christmas" with 12,000 sold. The second best seller was Yo-Yo Ma's "Songs of Joy & Peace" with slightly less than 12,000.

STUFFED TURKEY: After glancing at the list of big album releases due Nov. 17 and Nov. 24, our jaw dropped at the number of blockbuster titles squeezed into the two-week frame.

First, Nov. 17 heralds "American Idol" winner Kris Allen's debut; Norah Jones' fourth studio album, "The Fall"; Leona Lewis' second set, "Echo"; John Mayer's "Battle Studies"; and Casting Crowns' "Until the Whole World Hears."

The following week is when the floodgates burst open with debut albums from "Britain's Got Talent" contestant Susan Boyle and "American Idol" runner-up Adam Lambert, as well as Rihanna's "Rated R," Timbaland's "Shock Value 2" and 50 Cent's "Before I Self Destruct."

Nov. 17 is also the street date for a new live set from Paul McCartney and hits packages from Fall Out Boy and Janet Jackson. There are others in the pipeline as well.

It's understandable that albums by so many marquee names are due from mid-November through the end of the year. In 2008, the final five weeks of the year—from Thanksgiving week forward—accounted for 16.5% of the year's album sales (70.6 million out of 428.4 million).

The share was even larger in the year prior. The final six weeks of 2007—Turkey Day arrived earlier—made up 19.7% of the year's album sales (98.7 million out of 500.5 million).

When pairing those stats with the fact that consumers are scrutinizing how they spend their hard-earned cash, it's not surprising that there's a little something for everyone when it comes to new albums this holiday season.

Still, it's too bad that some of these major album releases couldn't have been delivered sooner—especially those that would have sold well regardless of release date. We're not pretending that we know that any of the fourth quarter's biggies could have been sent to stores sooner—it's just wishful thinking. ••••

The veteran band enters with 32,000 sold, securing its second top 20 album and first top 10. The act's last studio set, the 2006 "At War With the Mystics," debuted and peaked at No. 11 with 48,000 in its opening frame.

Led by Linkin Park singer Chester Bennington, the act's debut begins with 17,000 sold. The band made its network TV premiere Oct. 13 when it played "Late Show With David Letterman."

The act's first album since 2006 starts with 15,000 sold. The set's first single, "Chances," bullets at No. 17 on the Adult Top 40 chart, it's the group's sixth top 20 hit on that tally.

The album's availability in Starbucks helps it vault 39%. Meanwhile, the continuing impact from Regina Spektor's Oct. 10 performance on "Saturday Night Live" moves her 102-83 (up 9%).

"Unstoppable" becomes the 13th album to sell 1 million copies this year. Beyonce's "I Am . . . Sasha Fierce" will likely pass that threshold next week, as will Michael Jackson's "Essential."
